Defendants.

Case No.

PLAINTIFF'S VERIFIED COMPLAINT

Plaintiff Simon Ateba complaining against the above-named Defendants (collectively, the “White House” or “Defendants”) alleges as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. A free and robust press is vital to a healthy democracy. The Framers understood this to be an unassailable truth, enshrining protection of the free press in the First Amendment as an essential check on government power. This constitutional safeguard is at its zenith when the government itself is the subject of scrutiny.

2. “The press” does not just include a small class of elite journalists, credentialed by one another. The First Amendment’s guarantees protect the public’s right to engage in constitutionally protected press activity. Indeed, the “inclusion of the words ‘the press’ in the First Amendment does not confer upon [journalists] a title of nobility.”¹

3. Mr. Ateba is the White House correspondent for Today News Africa, a daily online news publication primarily covering American politics and relations between the United States and African countries. Just like other White House correspondents, Mr. Ateba regularly interacts with, and requests information from, the White House Press Office for his coverage. But in the five years since joining the White House press corps, Mr. Ateba has been treated with contempt by the current Press Secretary, Karine Jean-Pierre, and her staff, receiving only a handful of responses to questions and almost no opportunity to meaningfully communicate with the White House.

4. Given his publication’s focus on U.S./African relations, Mr. Ateba’s questions often relate to issues other White House correspondents do not cover. The White House’s refusal to communicate with Mr. Ateba significantly undermines his ability to properly inform his readers. Mr. Ateba covers topics affecting millions of people around the world—and many of his colleagues have little interest in asking the questions to which Mr. Ateba wants answers.

5. After months of not receiving answers to his inquiries from the White House press office, Mr. Ateba chose to utilize the only option available to him: speaking up during press briefings. On several occasions since December 2021, Mr. Ateba asserted himself in the briefing room, speaking over other reporters and the White House Press Secretary in an attempt to make

6. While Mr. Ateba has garnered national attention for his approach, he simply wants to do his job. To do this, he must be treated like any other correspondent—which includes having access to the White House and an open dialogue with the White House Press Office.

7. But the White House has made clear it does not intend to treat Mr. Ateba like his colleagues. Quite the opposite: the White House Press Office recently revised its credentialing criteria for a media “hard pass” this past May in a brazen attempt to exclude Mr. Ateba from the White House briefing room. As of August 1, 2023, over 440 previously credentialed White House reporters no longer have “hard pass” access to the White House media facilities under the new requirements.² While other reporters were affected by the revisions, excluding Mr. Ateba was the primary objective because the White House no longer wanted deal with him or his questions.³

8. Targeted changes to hard-pass credentialing qualifications to exclude specific journalists is troubling by itself, but the new credentialing criteria the White House adopted also raise grave First Amendment concerns for reporters generally. As a prerequisite to obtaining a

White House hard pass, the applicant must—among other things—first have press credentials from the Supreme Court or one of the four Congressional Press Galleries. For Mr. Ateba, like many journalists, this is no easy task, and it further bears no logical relation to covering the White House, a different branch of government.

9. Obtaining credentials from the Supreme Court is generally effectively impossible for any White House-focused journalist, because the Court only gives out a limited number of passes—and only to reporters who cover the Court full-time.

10. The Congressional Press Galleries are only slightly better. Executive committees self-selected by the journalists who make up the Congressional press corps govern each of the four press galleries. And these executive committees only issue press credentials to journalists they themselves deem to be “of repute.” As a result, the entrenched, mainstream media have the power to pick and choose which reporters may access Congress and the White House. These decisions are subject to the final approval of the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. But in practice, whatever the Correspondents Committees say, goes.

11. Mr. Ateba applied for credentials to the Congressional Daily Press Gallery on June 5, 2023, and has yet to receive any word on the progress of his application.

12. Defendants’ modification of the White House hard-pass criteria means Mr. Ateba is no longer able to set foot on the White House grounds without going through the daily process of receiving short-term approval. For a journalist seeking regular access to the White House briefing room, this cumbersome process is untenable long term.

13. Moreover, the process adopted by the White House—i.e., delegating access to the White House “hard pass” to the other branches of government—is an unconstitutional attempt to arbitrarily restrict who qualifies as “the press.” Established media outlets control the Congressional Correspondents Committees, which only provide press credentials to reporters who meet the vague standard of being a “reputable journalist.” Congress gave the committees unbridled discretion to pick and choose which journalists can exercise their constitutional rights at the Capitol. The White House has incorporated this delegation into its own credentialing process—and with it, the same constitutional infirmities.

14. Defendants do not like Mr. Ateba’s behavior—or his questions—during press briefings. But instead of enforcing a decorum requirement equally across all White House correspondents, Defendants simply re-defined who is allowed in the door in the first place. And they did so to specifically exclude Mr. Ateba.

15. Defendants’ intentional discrimination against Mr. Ateba and the conditions the White House has placed on obtaining a “hard pass” violate the First Amendment. Mr. Ateba brings this action to vindicate his constitutional rights—the same rights shared by all other members of a free press.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

16. This action arises under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202, and the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 701, et seq. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction over this action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1361.

17. Venue is proper in this District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b)(2) and (e)(1). A substantial part of the events giving rise to this claim occurred in this District, and Defendants are officers of the United States sued in their official capacities.

PARTIES

18. Mr. Ateba is the White House Correspondent for Today News Africa (“TNA”), an online publication that focuses on relations between the United States and African nations. Mr.

Ateba has been a journalist for over fifteen years and has regularly covered politics and public affairs in both Africa and in the United States. Mr. Ateba has been the White House Correspondent for TNA since 2018. He has held a White House hard pass since February 2021.

19. Defendant Karine Jean-Pierre is Press Secretary to the President of the United States. As press secretary, Ms. Jean-Pierre is in charge of the White House Press Office, the organization responsible for credentialing reporters for the White House press facilities. She is sued in her official capacity.

20. The United States Secret Service is the federal law enforcement agency that administers and oversees security at the White House. The Secret Service performs background checks on those seeking a White House hard pass and is the agency ultimately responsible for issuing the hard pass.

21. Defendant Kimberly Cheatle is Director of the United States Secret Service. She is sued in her official capacity.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The White House Press Room

22. The James J. Brady Press Briefing Room is perhaps the most important forum for news media to interact with the President of the United States and his staff. Nearly every major media outlet in the country—and many others around the world—has a designated correspondent stationed at the White House to report on the daily activities of the President and his administration. The White House press corps, however, also includes reporters from smaller outlets, ranging from start-ups to regional publications. In the briefing room, correspondents from the New York Times, Washington Post, CNN, and ABC News sit shoulder to shoulder with correspondents from publications with a mere fraction of the viewership and subscriber base of the larger outlets.

23. For all journalists, the White House briefing room serves as an essential access point for those seeking to cover the President of the United States.

24. But it is not a place for the faint of heart. Reporters must fend for themselves in order to do their job, which is to obtain information for their readers, viewers, and listeners.

25. The unpredictable and volatile atmosphere of press briefings breeds disorder, tense exchanges, and, of course, raised voices. Yet the briefing room has historically operated under little more than an informal understanding that all correspondents would act professionally. And while some administrations have adopted more formal expressions of their decorum expectations, they largely exist on paper only. Despite the many instances where journalists failed to adhere to these expectations, formal punishment for decorum violations is exceedingly rare.

26. Journalists seeking access to the White House press facilities and briefing room must have the proper credentials. The White House issues short-term passes for one day up to six months. These passes require the individual to submit to heightened Secret Service scrutiny each time they come to the White House.

27. Some journalists can obtain a “hard pass,” a special form of press credentials that allows unlimited access to the White House press facilities. As the White House Correspondents’ Association previously advised, “[a] hard pass is critical for anyone who reports regularly on the White House.’ . . . It is no exaggeration to say that, without the access that a hard pass grants, a White House correspondent cannot effectively perform his or her duties, which include providing the public with on-the-spot-news coverage of unforeseen and unscheduled events, along with cataloguing the daily activities of the head of the executive branch.”⁴

28. The White House has had no shortage of controversy surrounding revocation of press credentials. The Washington Post has had press credentials revoked from its journalists on numerous occasions after provoking the ire of various Presidents and their staff over scandals, including Watergate and the Pentagon Papers.⁵ Arbitrary enforcement of the White House press credentialing regime has even resulted in litigation.⁶

29. Strained relations between the White House and the press corps persisted during the Trump administration. High-profile examples include the Trump White House revoking the press credentials of CNN White House Correspondent Jim Acosta and Playboy Correspondent Brian Karem.

30. The 2018 Acosta incident followed months of tense exchanges during press briefings between the CNN Correspondent and the White House press staff. Mr. Acosta regularly spoke over the press secretary during exchanges. Other White House correspondents expressed dismay at Mr. Acosta's behavior. During one particularly heated exchange, Mr. Acosta refused to give up the microphone during a briefing, prompting the White House to revoke his hard pass.

31. The White House Correspondents' Association "strongly object[ed] to the Trump Administration's decision to use US Secret Service security credentials as a tool to punish a reporter with whom it has a difficult relationship."⁷

32. The Trump White House also revoked the hard pass of Playboy Correspondent Brian Karem in 2019 following an incident at a Social Media Summit in the Rose Garden between Karem and a Trump Administration advisor. This prompted the White House to revoke his credentials for “unprofessional conduct.”

33. Both reporters went to court over the revocation of their hard passes.⁸ The district court found Acosta was likely to succeed on the merits of his claim and issued a preliminary injunction requiring the White House to reinstate Acosta’s credentials. The White House did not appeal the district court’s injunction.⁹

34. Karem’s case went to the DC Circuit, which held revocation of his press pass by the White House violated his due process rights. The court concluded that Karem had a liberty interest in his press pass and that he was not on notice that his conduct at the Rose Garden could lead to the revocation. This failure to provide notice was a deprivation of procedural due process.

35. Following the lawsuit filed by Acosta, the Trump Administration revised the press credentialing requirements to obtain a hard pass.¹⁰ The revisions included the onerous requirement that journalists appear on the White House grounds for 90 of the previous 180 days to qualify for a hard pass. The practical impact of this new requirement was that many long-time White House reporters lost their credentials.

36. Though the Trump White House argued the new credentialing requirements were necessary due to “security concerns,” many journalists speculated that the changes were intended to prevent specific journalists from obtaining a hard pass.¹¹ Indeed, the Trump White House provided “exemptions” to certain journalists that it deemed worthy of keeping their hard pass.¹²

37. The media’s most powerful institutions and civil liberties advocates alike uniformly denounced the new credentialing requirements and practice of handing out exemptions. The ACLU blasted the move as “un-American.”¹³ The collective response from free press advocates was that the White House’s new credentialing requirements were a direct assault on the First Amendment.

Mr. Ateba’s Coverage of the White House

38. Mr. Ateba is the White House correspondent for the daily online publication Today News Africa.¹⁴ Mr. Ateba has been a journalist for the past fifteen years, covering politics and current affairs in both Africa and in the United States during most of that time. This includes covering both the United States State Department and the White House for the past five years.

39. Mr. Ateba became a White House Correspondent in 2018. For his first three years covering the White House, Mr. Ateba obtained a temporary daily press pass, which required him to go through additional Secret Service security prior to entering the grounds.

40. Mr. Ateba applied for, and received, a White House “hard pass” in February 2021.

41. Since then, Mr. Ateba has covered the White House on a daily basis. He writes regular stories for TNA, which requires regular communication with the White House Press Office. Thus, Mr. Ateba frequently sends questions to the White House Press Office and attend the White House press briefings.

42. Over his five years as a White House correspondent, Mr. Ateba has rarely received any response—or even acknowledgement—of his questions from the White House. Regardless of what the questions are, the White House generally ignores them. This refusal to provide information to Mr. Ateba makes it increasingly difficult for Mr. Ateba to obtain the necessary information needed for the quality of coverage he seeks to provide his readers.

43. Mr. Ateba has been allowed to attend President Biden’s press conferences just once in nearly three years. When he attempts to attend, he is denied access. For the press conferences he was allowed to attend, he was not allowed to ask a question.

44. Mr. Ateba requested an opportunity to interview President Biden in the lead up to an African Leaders Summit at the White House in December 2022. These requests were completely ignored.

45. After months of not receiving responses to written questions from the White House and not receiving an opportunity to ask questions in the briefing room, Mr. Ateba resorted to one of the only options available to him: speaking up during press briefings.

46. It is common for White House correspondents to raise their voices and even shout over each other during press briefings. Indeed, the D.C. Circuit has acknowledged that “[i]n the context of a White House press corps described as an ‘unruly mob,’ behavior such as a journalist shouting questions and engaging in a sarcastic, ‘irreverent, caustic’ back and forth with White House staff ‘was not so outrageous as to bring into fair contemplation’ a suspension of a reporter’s hard pass.¹⁵

47. Just like his colleagues, Mr. Ateba would engage in the scrum, shouting his questions to the White House Press Secretary questions during briefings. And on a few occasions, when the Press Secretary would not acknowledge him, Mr. Ateba would speak over his fellow journalists.

48. The White House did not appreciate this “breach of decorum.”

49. One notable incident took place on March 20, 2023. The Press Secretary began the daily briefing by introducing the cast of the hit Apple TV show Ted Lasso. The White House invited the group to the briefing to discuss the President’s mental-health initiatives. Before the Press Secretary could finish the introduction, Mr. Ateba began speaking, questioning why he has not received any responses to his written inquiries or been given the opportunity to ask a question during the press briefing. A tense exchange between Mr. Ateba and the Press Secretary followed, which included shouts from other correspondents for “decorum.”

50. The March 20 incident received national media attention.¹⁶

51. Another notable incident took place on June 26, 2023. In another attempt to receive answers from the White House regarding its refusal to respond to his questions, Mr. Ateba interrupted a fellow correspondent during a daily press briefing. Mr. Ateba pressed forward with his questioning, despite his fellow correspondents asking him to stop. The White House went as far as to scrub video footage of this incident in which the Press Secretary told Mr. Ateba that he was “being incredibly rude” from its YouTube livestream.

52. Since December 2021, Mr. Ateba has asserted himself during the press briefings on a number of occasions. The mainstream media coverage of these incidents has largely painted Mr. Ateba as disruptive, disrespectful, and even seeking attention for himself. But Mr. Ateba is simply seeking answers to his questions, which the White House refuses to give.¹⁷

53. The White House did not like these exchanges and wanted them to end.¹⁸

The White House Targets Mr. Ateba

54. On information and belief, the significant media coverage focusing on Mr. Ateba’s conduct in the briefing room prompted the Biden White House to act. On May 5, 2023, the White House notified all existing hard pass holders that it was restricting who could qualify for a hard pass. See Exhibit A (Email Announcing the New White House Press Office Policy). The White House Press Office issued a new list of stated criteria for obtaining a hard pass, and required that all existing hard passes terminate on July 31, 2023, and that journalists would have to apply for a new pass under the updated criteria.

55. The new criteria include:

- Full-time employment with an organization whose principal business is news dissemination (If you are freelance, we will need letters from two news organizations describing your affiliation, or, if you freelance primarily for one organization, a letter from that organization describing the extent and duration of your relationship with the organization);

- Physical address (either residential or professional) in the greater Washington, D.C. area;
- Have accessed the White House campus at least once during the prior six months for work, or have proof of employment within the last three months to cover the White House;
- Assignment to cover (or provide technical support in covering) the White House on a regular basis;
- Accreditation by a press gallery in either the Supreme Court, U.S. Senate or U.S. House of Representatives; and
- Willingness to submit to any necessary investigation by the U.S. Secret Service to determine eligibility for access to the White House complex, where Secret Service will determine eligibility based on whether the applicant presents a potential risk to the safety or security of the President, the Vice President, or the White House complex.

56. Mr. Ateba objected to the new hard pass requirements and requested the White House delay implementation for one year to allow him time to obtain press credentials from a Congressional Press Gallery. The White House never responded to his request.

57. Media outlets widely reported that the new hard pass requirements were targeted directly at Mr. Ateba.¹⁹ His high-profile exchanges with the White House Press Secretary during briefings had garnered both international media attention, and a provoked the anger of the Biden Administration.

58. Additional actions taken by the White House confirm that the new hard pass criteria targeted Mr. Ateba. On July 27, 2023, the White House took the rare step of issuing a written warning to Mr. Ateba regarding this conduct during daily press briefings. See Exhibit B (Letter of ¹⁹ Steven Nelson, White House unveils new press badge restrictions, rules for access, The New York Post (May 5, 2023), <https://nypost.com/2023/05/05/white-house-unveils-new-press-badge-restrictions-rules-for-access/>; Justin Baragona White house wants new rules to shut down briefing room chaos, Daily Beast (March 27, 2023), <https://www.thedailybeast.com/white-house-wants-new-rules-to-shut-down-briefing-room-chaos>.

Reprimand to Mr. Ateba). The letter described four specific instances in which Mr. Ateba allegedly disrupted the daily press briefings. If Mr. Ateba continued this conduct, the letter warned, his “hard pass may be suspended or revoked, following notice and an opportunity to respond.”²⁰

59. In the letter, the White House also pointed to the new decorum criteria it announced in May and advised Mr. Ateba that he must adhere to these expected standards or risk revocation of his press credentials.

The Press Credential Gatekeepers

60. The threat of revoking Mr. Ateba’s press credentials was largely meaningless because the White House knew he would not qualify for a hard pass under the new criteria. Indeed, excluding Mr. Ateba was the goal of the specific revisions.

61. The White House Press Office’s new criteria for a hard pass includes a requirement that an applicant must first be credentialed by the press gallery of the United States Supreme Court, or one of the press galleries in either chamber of Congress.

62. Consistent with the White House Press Office’s warning, the U.S. Secret Service terminated Mr. Ateba’s hard pass on July 31, 2023.

63. Mr. Ateba’s hard pass was not scheduled to expired, and would automatically renew so long as he continued covering the White House.

64. On August 4, 2023, Mr. Ateba requested the White House Press delay termination of his hard pass until his application to the Daily Congressional Press Gallery or Supreme Court was approved or denied. The White House refused this request.

65. The termination of Plaintiff’s hard pass represents the culmination of agency action, and thus, is a final agency action. See 7 U.S.C. § 704. While Plaintiff can (and did) apply for a new hard pass, this is a new agency action, not a reinstatement of Plaintiff's prior pass.

66. The Secret Service's termination of Mr. Ateba's hard pass is arbitrary and capricious. When agencies change their policy, they are required to "provide reasoned explanation for its action," including showing "that there are good reasons for the new policy." The Secret Service has failed to do so, relying instead on the White House Press Office policy, which itself was issued without any explanation, let alone reasoned explanation.

67. The Supreme Court Public Information Office is responsible for issuing press credentials to journalists seeking to cover the Court.²¹ The press gallery at the Supreme Court is notoriously small with only 18 seats for journalists in the argument room. As a result, the Supreme Court only issues press credentials to journalists whose full-time beat involves coverage of the Supreme Court.²² Reporters who primarily cover the White House cannot qualify for a Supreme Court pass.

68. Obtaining credentials from one of the Congressional Press Galleries is Mr. Ateba's only option for obtaining a White House hard pass. This is not a viable option, either.

69. The media has been covering Congress since its earliest sessions.²³ The press have designated galleries in both chambers of Congress. These "galleries" include office space and work resources for credentialed journalists covering Congress.

70. Ever since the late nineteenth century, Congress delegated regulation of access to the Congressional Press Galleries to the Correspondents Committees—a group of journalists elected to oversee credentialing and other administrative aspects of the Congressional press galleries. Today, there are four Correspondents Committees: the Daily Press Galleries (for daily news publications); the Periodical Press Galleries (for weekly, monthly, and quarterly publications); the Radio and Television Galleries; and the Press Photographers’ Gallery. Each chamber of Congress has provided professional staff for each respective press gallery.

71. The Correspondents Committee for each gallery is made up of five or six members—all journalists who already have press credentials. The executive committee of the Daily Press Gallery, for example, is made up of journalists from the Detroit News, CQ-Roll Call, the Associated Press, the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, and States Newsroom.²⁴ These standing committees process applications based on the respective credentialing criteria adopted by each gallery. They are the gatekeepers to the press credentials.

72. To qualify for press credentials for the Daily Press Gallery, a journalist must be:

- A bona fide correspondents of repute in their profession;
- A full-time, paid correspondent who requires on-site access to congressional members and staff;
- Employed by a news organization: with General Publication periodicals mailing privileges under U.S. Postal Service rules, and which publishes daily; . . . or “whose principal business is the daily dissemination of original news and opinion of interest to a broad segment of the public, and which has published continuously for 18 months;

- Reside in the Washington, D.C. area;
- Not be engaged in any lobbying or paid advocacy, advertising, publicity or promotion work for any individual, political party, corporation, organization, or agency of the U.S. Government, or in prosecuting any claim before Congress or any federal government department, and will not do so while a member of the Daily Press Galleries;
- And they must be editorially independent of any institution, foundation or interest group that lobbies the federal government, or that is not principally a general news organization.²⁵

73. The other press galleries have similar requirements.²⁶

74. This gatekeeping function has had a dramatic effect on outlet diversity in Congress over the past decade. In 2017, the Congressional Research Services found that the number of credentialed correspondents in Congress increased from around 2,500 in 1976 to 6,000 in 2016. But during that same period, the number of credentialed media outlets dropped from over 1,200 to fewer than 600. This drop in the number of media outlets covering Congress supports the notion that the Correspondents Committees responsible for credentialing have become increasingly insular and hostile to “outsiders.”

Mr. Ateba Persists

75. In response to the new restrictions the White House adopted for hard passes in May 2023, Mr. Ateba applied for press credentials with the Standing Committee of Correspondents for the Daily Press Gallery.

76. Mr. Ateba submitted his application on June 5, 2023. See Exhibit C (Letter from to Senate Daily Press Gallery). He has yet to receive a response.

77. Mr. Ateba applied for press credentials from the Supreme Court Press office on August 3, 2023. See Exhibit D (Letter to the Supreme Court Public Information Office). The Supreme Court press office informed Mr. Ateba that he was not eligible for Court press credentials because he does not cover the Supreme Court full time for his publication.

78. On information and belief, the Supreme Court Public Information Office has informed the White House that it will not issue hard passes for any White House journalists due to space constraints at the Court. The Supreme Court's Public Information Office indicated as much to Mr. Ateba. Mr. Ateba intends to prove this through discovery.

79. Knowing he would be denied for not having the requisite credentials from a Congressional Press Gallery or the Supreme Court, Mr. Ateba initially did not apply for a White House hard pass renewal by the July 31 deadline.

80. Out of an abundance of caution, Mr. Ateba reapplied for a White House hard pass on August 4, 2023.

81. Despite being specifically targeted by the White House for exclusion, and despite being subject to the unbridled discretion of the Standing Committee for the Congressional Press Gallery, Mr. Ateba will continue to cover the White House for TNA. Though this job has become exceedingly more difficult without a hard pass, Mr. Ateba is determined to continue providing quality coverage for his readers.

82. But without a hard pass, Mr. Ateba is, and will continue to be, irreparably harmed. Defendants have infringed on his constitutional rights. And this infringement will persist absent intervention by this court.

FIRST CLAIM FOR RELIEF
Violation of the First and Fifth Amendments
(Delegation of Unbridled Discretion)

83. Mr. Ateba hereby incorporates by reference all other paragraphs of this Verified Complaint as though fully set forth herein.

84. The hard-pass criteria adopted by the White House Press office in May 2023 violate the First Amendment. By requiring that all applicants obtain press credentials from the Supreme Court or one of the Congressional Press Galleries, Defendants have adopted a regime that gives the government unbridled discretion to permit the exercise of First Amendment rights.

85. The four Congressional Press Gallery Standing Committees wield this unbridled discretion, only approving credentials for journalists they deem are “reputable.” The failure to adopt and apply purely objective standards for congressional press credentials renders the credentialing process unconstitutional. The White House has incorporated this credentialing process into its own hard pass criteria, rendering the White House process constitutionally impermissible as well.

86. Defendants have no compelling reason to justify this impermissible credentialing process, nor is this process narrowly tailored.

87. Mr. Ateba has no adequate remedy at law, has suffered, and will suffer serious and irreparable harm to his constitutional rights unless the White House is enjoined.

88. Mr. Ateba is entitled to declaratory relief and temporary, preliminary, and permanent injunctive relief invalidating and restraining the White House from violating his constitutional rights.

89. Mr. Ateba found it necessary to engage the services of private counsel to vindicate his rights under the law. Mr. Ateba is therefore entitled to an award of attorneys’ fees and costs pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2412.

SECOND CLAIM FOR RELIEF
Violation of the First Amendment
(Viewpoint Discrimination)

90. Mr. Ateba hereby incorporates by reference all other paragraphs of this Verified Complaint as though fully set forth herein.

91. Defendants violated Mr. Ateba's First Amendment rights by changing the criteria for hard pass credentials to intentionally prevent Mr. Ateba from obtaining hard pass access. Defendants did so by adopting credentialing criteria specifically designed to exclude Mr. Ateba from eligibility. Such discrimination amounts to a content-based regulation and viewpoint discrimination against Mr. Ateba in violation of the First Amendment.

92. Defendants have no compelling reason to exclude Mr. Ateba from obtaining a White House hard pass. Even if they did, this exclusion is not narrowly tailored to achieve this interest.

93. Mr. Ateba has no adequate remedy at law, has suffered, and will suffer serious and irreparable harm to his constitutional rights unless the White House is enjoined.

94. Mr. Ateba is entitled to declaratory relief and temporary, preliminary, and permanent injunctive relief invalidating and restraining the White House from violating his constitutional rights.

95. Mr. Ateba found it necessary to engage the services of private counsel to vindicate his rights under the law. Mr. Ateba is therefore entitled to an award of attorneys' fees and costs pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2412.

THIRD CLAIM FOR RELIEF
Violation of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. § 702)

96. Mr. Ateba hereby incorporates by reference all other paragraphs of this Verified

Complaint as though fully set forth herein.

97. The Secret Service is an agency within the meaning of the Administrative Procedure Act.

98. On July 31, 2023, the Secret Service terminated Mr. Ateba's hard pass.

99. The termination of Mr. Ateba's hard pass is a final agency action.

100. The termination of Mr. Ateba's hard pass is also a change in agency policy or position.

101. The Secret Service has failed to provide any reason to justify terminating Mr. Ateba's hard pass, let alone a "good reason" or "reasoned explanation." Instead, the Secret Service appears to be relying on a policy issue by the White House Press Office, which likewise provides no explanation for the change in policy.

102. By failing to provide a reasoned explanation for its change in policy or position, the Secret Service has acted arbitrarily and capriciously in cancelling Mr. Ateba's hard pass, in violation of 5 U.S.C. § 702.

103. By virtue of the ongoing violation of Mr. Ateba's rights, Mr. Ateba is entitled to a declaration that the Secret Service's cancellation of Mr. Ateba's hard pass was arbitrary and capricious, and an injunction preventing the Secret Service from cancelling Mr. Ateba's previously issued hard pass.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff Simon Ateba prays this Honorable Court grant the following relief in his favor:

1. Declaratory relief in the form of an order and declaratory judgment holding and declaring that the White House Press Office's revised credentialing requirements are unconstitutional on their face and as applied under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution for the reasons set forth above;

2. Injunctive relief in the form of a temporary, preliminary, and permanent injunction requiring the Government, its agents, employees, and all persons acting in concert with them to not enforce the revised White House credentialing requirements;

3. Declaratory relief in the form of an order and declaratory judgement holding and declaring that the U.S. Secret Service's termination of Mr. Ateba's hard pass was arbitrary and capricious, in violation of law;

4. Injunctive relief in the form of a temporary, preliminary, and permanent injunction enjoining the U.S. Secret Service from terminating Mr. Ateba's hard pass without reasoned explanation;

5. That the Court issue the requested injunctive relief without a condition of bond or surety or other security being required of Mr. Ateba;

Dear colleague,

We are writing to inform you that the White House intends to revise the policy on press hard passes to be consistent with that of prior administrations. Under the policy, all current press hard passes will expire on July 31. You will be able to request renewal of your current hard pass as described below, and any renewed passes will remain valid for one year, subject to annual renewal.

To renew your pass, your bureau chief/supervisor will need to email a letter to presswaves@who.eop.gov. Your news organization will not need to submit multiple letters if requesting hard passes for more than one employee as long as your letter covers all employees requesting hard pass access to the White House campus.

This letter will need to be written on the official letterhead of your news organization, including contact information for someone who can verify the details provided below, and indicate that each applicant meets the following requirements:

1. Full-time employment with an organization whose principal business is news dissemination (If you are freelance, we will need letters from two news organizations describing your affiliation, or, if you freelance primarily for one organization, a letter from that organization describing the extent and duration of your relationship with the organization);
2. Physical address (either residential or professional) in the greater Washington, D.C. area;
3. Have accessed the White House campus at least once during the prior six months for work, or have proof of employment within the last three months to cover the White House;
4. Assignment to cover (or provide technical support in covering) the White House on a regular basis;
5. Accreditation by a press gallery in either the Supreme Court, U.S. Senate or U.S. House of Representatives; and
6. Willingness to submit to any necessary investigation by the U.S. Secret Service to determine eligibility for access to the White House complex, where Secret Service will determine eligibility based on whether the applicant presents a potential risk to the safety or security of the President, the Vice President, or the White House complex.

This letter should be attached, along with a photograph or scan of a Supreme Court, Senate, or House of Representatives credential, and the completed hard pass application and submitted at one time to presswaves@who.eop.gov.

After receiving the letter from your supervisor and updating your background check, the U.S. Secret Service will grant a hard pass upon confirmation from the Press Office that you meet the above criteria. You will not need to receive a new physical pass if you already have one.

If you currently do not have a hard pass, you will need to complete the standard application and also provide the letter stated above. The Press Office will then be in touch to schedule a time to pick up your hard pass if approved.

The White House expects that all hard pass holders will act in a professional manner while on White House grounds by respecting their colleagues, White House employees, and guests; observing stated restrictions on access to areas of the White House or credentialed events; and not impeding events or briefings on campus. Absent security concerns involving the United States Secret Service or other exigent circumstances, the White House will provide a written warning to you if your conduct violates these expectations. Subsequent violations may lead to the suspension or revocation of your hard pass, following notice and an opportunity to respond.

If you have comments or questions regarding this proposed policy, please submit them to presswaves@who.eop.gov no later than May 15. Please let us know if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

The White House Press Office

EXHIBIT B

Mr. Ateba,

We strongly support the important role that members of the press play in covering the White House. As part of that role, reporters ask tough questions of White House officials to better understand the Administration's position on important policy matters. These questions, and the resulting exchanges, are expected elements of the back-and-forth that regularly occurs in reporting the news to the American people.

That back-and-forth only works, however, when the individuals who are part of it engage with each other in a professional and respectful manner. When members of the press impede briefings or other events by shouting over colleagues who have been called on for a question, or yelling over a White House official who is trying to respond to a question or present a briefing, all members of the press are harmed in their ability to report the news.

On May 5, 2023, the White House issued a notice to holders of hard passes to, among other things, inform them of the expectations for professional behavior on White House grounds. Those expectations include respecting your colleagues and not impeding events or briefings on campus. The notice further informed holders of hard passes that, "[a]bsent security concerns involving the United States Secret Service or other exigent circumstances, the White House will provide a written warning to you if your conduct violates these expectations. Subsequent violations may lead to the suspension or revocation of your hard pass, following notice and an opportunity to respond."

In contravention of these expectations, you impeded a June 26, 2023, press briefing and interrupted the Press Secretary. When the Press Secretary called on another member of the press, you continued to interrupt, preventing your colleague from asking his question. You did not stop interrupting when your colleagues asked you to stop, or when the Press Secretary informed you that you were being rude to her and to your colleagues.¹

Although this written warning is specific to the June 26 press briefing, it was not an isolated episode. The following are just a few examples of times your behavior has prevented your colleagues from asking questions or prevented White House officials from answering them:

- On May 13, 2022, you repeatedly interrupted colleagues who were attempting to ask important questions about the supply of baby formula.²
- On December 8, 2022, you interrupted the press briefing and demanded to ask a question. When the Press Secretary tried to answer your question, you interrupted and shouted over her answer. The Press Secretary then attempted to call on one of your colleagues, but you continued to interrupt and prevented others from being heard. Your actions required the Press Secretary to end the briefing, preventing your colleagues from asking additional questions.³

- On March 20, 2023, you prevented the Press Secretary from introducing White House guests at a press briefing by shouting over her. Other members of the press called for “decorum” in the room. One of your colleagues apologized to the guests for the disruption before the briefing continued. Several minutes later, you again interrupted and impeded the briefing while other members of the press again asked for decorum. While you were impeding the briefing, the Press Secretary could not speak and other members of the press could not ask questions. One member of the press felt it necessary to explain how your disruptive actions had harmed all other journalists at the briefing, stating that “you are impinging on everybody in here who is only trying to do their job.”⁴
 - Later that day, the White House Correspondents’ Association emailed its members, explaining that “there was an extreme breakdown of decorum in today’s Daily Briefing.” According to the Association, “[w]hat happened today created a hostile work environment for everyone in that room.” The Association explained that the breakdown caused by your outbursts “prevent[ed] a briefing from proceeding,” which “hurts the entire press corps and amounts to a violation of the collegiality called for in the WHCA’s bylaws.”

The White House recognizes that members of the press often raise their voices or shout questions at press briefings or events. Ordinarily such shouting stops when a reporter is called on for a question, and the briefing or event is able to continue. Continued interruptions are different; they prevent journalists from asking questions or administration officials and guests from responding. The Press Secretary’s only option in response to such disruptions is to stop the briefing or event, which is to the detriment of all journalists.

This letter serves as your written warning, pursuant to the May 5, 2023 Notice, that the behavior you exhibited on June 26, 2023 is unacceptable. If you continue to impede briefings or events by shouting over your colleagues who have been called on for a question, even after you have been asked to stop by a White House employee, then your hard pass may be suspended or revoked, following notice and an opportunity to respond.

We hope that you will work with us to avoid any future issues in the press briefing room or at other events on White House grounds. If you would like to comment on this letter, please reply by email within 7 days.

Subject: Introduction of Simon Ateba - White House Correspondent and Congressional Reporter

Dear Senate Press Gallery,

I am writing to introduce Mr. Simon Ateba, an esteemed journalist and our White House Correspondent at Today News Africa. We are thrilled to inform you that Mr. Ateba will now be extending his coverage to include the Senate and House of Representatives, with a particular focus on the work being done by various committees on Africa, including diplomacy, trade, investment, education, cultural exchanges, and security ties.

Today News Africa is a for-profit publication based in the District of Columbia, dedicated to shedding light on the dynamic and multifaceted relationships between the United States and Africa. Recognizing the significance of Congress in shaping these relationships, we believe that Mr. Ateba's extensive experience and expertise will greatly contribute to providing comprehensive coverage of the legislative affairs and policy developments that impact the African continent.

Mr. Ateba is a highly accomplished journalist with a strong background in Mass Communications. With over 15 years of professional experience in journalism, he has diligently covered a wide range of beats, from politics to policy, and from aviation to drug trafficking. He has also established a notable presence in reporting on key institutions such as the State Department and the White House.

By expanding his coverage to Congress, Mr. Ateba seeks to enhance public understanding of the vital role that legislative initiatives play in shaping U.S.-Africa relations. Through his reporting, he aims to provide accurate and insightful analysis of committee activities, legislative debates, and policy developments related to Africa. With his well-honed skills as a journalist, his commitment to journalistic ethics, and his ability to effectively communicate complex issues, we are confident that Mr. Ateba will bring a fresh perspective to the Senate Press Gallery.

We kindly request your assistance in facilitating Mr. Ateba's access to press briefings, committee hearings, and other relevant activities within the Senate and House of Representatives. His coverage will contribute to a better-informed public and foster a deeper understanding of the critical relationship between the United States and Africa.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. We would be delighted to provide any further information or answer any questions you may have. Please feel free to contact us at todaynewsafrika@proton.me or reach out to me directly at 2025390126.

We look forward to the opportunity of working closely with the Senate Press Gallery to ensure comprehensive coverage of Congressional affairs.

Sincerely,
Olabisi Ololade

INSTRUCTIONS FOR COMPLETING CIVIL COVER SHEET JS-44
 Authority for Civil Cover Sheet

The JS-44 civil cover sheet and the information contained herein neither replaces nor supplements the filings and services of pleadings or other papers as required by law, except as provided by local rules of court. This form, approved by the Judicial Conference of the United States in September 1974, is required for the use of the Clerk of Court for the purpose of initiating the civil docket sheet. Consequently, a civil cover sheet is submitted to the Clerk of Court for each civil complaint filed. Listed below are tips for completing the civil coversheet. These tips coincide with the Roman Numerals on the cover sheet.

- I. COUNTY OF RESIDENCE OF FIRST LISTED PLAINTIFF/DEFENDANT (b) County of residence: Use 11001 to indicate plaintiff if resident of Washington, DC, 88888 if plaintiff is resident of United States but not Washington, DC, and 99999 if plaintiff is outside the United States.
- III. CITIZENSHIP OF PRINCIPAL PARTIES: This section is completed only if diversity of citizenship was selected as the Basis of Jurisdiction under Section II.
- IV. CASE ASSIGNMENT AND NATURE OF SUIT: The assignment of a judge to your case will depend on the category you select that best represents the primary cause of action found in your complaint. You may select only one category. You must also select one corresponding nature of suit found under the category of the case.
- VI. CAUSE OF ACTION: Cite the U.S. Civil Statute under which you are filing and write a brief statement of the primary cause.
- VIII. RELATED CASE(S), IF ANY: If you indicated that there is a related case, you must complete a related case form, which may be obtained from the Clerk's Office.

Because of the need for accurate and complete information, you should ensure the accuracy of the information provided prior to signing the form.

PLAINTIFF'S NOTICE OF ERRATA FOR VERIFIED COMPLAINT

Plaintiff Simon Ateba, by and through his undersigned counsel, files this Notice of Errata to correct a factual allegation in his Verified Complaint (ECF 1).

Paragraph 80 of the Verified Complaint states that “Out of an abundance of caution, Mr. Ateba reapplied for a White House hard pass on August 4, 2023.” Instead, this paragraph should read, consistent with Paragraph 64 of the Verified Complaint and page 12 of the Memorandum in Support of his Motion Preliminary Injunction (ECF 2), “[o]n August 4, 2023, Mr. Ateba requested the White House Press delay termination of his hard pass until his application to the Daily Congressional Press Gallery or Supreme Court was approved or denied. The White House refused this request.”

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

The D.C. Circuit has long recognized that journalists’ access to the White House may implicate First Amendment interests. See Karem v. Trump, 960 F.3d 656, 665 (D.C. Cir. 2020); Sherrill v. Knight, 569 F.2d 124, 129–30 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Simon Ateba, a journalist covering the White House for Today News Africa, an online publication focusing on American politics and the relationship between the United States and African countries, challenges a recent change in White House policy related to access for journalists. The new policy alters the requirements for obtaining a “hard pass”—a special press credential that allows a journalist to enter the White House press areas “on-demand.” Karem, 960 F.3d at 106. Ateba, who previously held a hard pass, lost his credential under the new rule.

On August 10, 2023, Ateba sued Karine Jean-Pierre, the White House Press Secretary; Kimberly Cheatle, the Director of the Secret Service; and the Secret Service (collectively, the “White House”), alleging that the new policy violates his First Amendment rights and runs afoul of the Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”).¹ Before the Court is Ateba’s motion for a preliminary injunction reinstating his hard pass and prohibiting the White House from enforcing the new policy. The Court will deny the motion because Ateba has not shown he is likely to suffer irreparable harm during the pendency of this litigation. The Court will, however, order expedited summary judgment briefing so that the merits of Ateba’s challenge can be swiftly adjudicated.

Background

For decades, the White House has offered press credentials to journalists who cover the President and his administration. See Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 126. These credentials allow journalists to access the press areas of the White House complex, including the James S. Brady Press Briefing Room, where they can attend press conferences, interview White House officials, and report on the day-to-day of the administration. See Pl.’s Verified Compl. [ECF No. 1] (“Compl.”) ¶¶ 22, 26–27. The White House press corps includes reporters from a wide range of outlets, who rely on the “essential access point” of the briefing room to do their jobs. Id. ¶¶ 22–23.

Given the “strict security requirements” necessary to protect the President, access to the White House is “tightly controlled.” Defs.’ Opp’n to Pl.’s Mot. for Prelim. Inj. [ECF No. 17] (“Opp’n”) at 2; see Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 130 (recognizing a “compelling, even . . . overwhelming interest” in the President’s safety (internal quotation marks omitted)). Today, the White House offers two principal forms of access: First, a reporter can obtain a “hard pass,” a credential that allows him to come and go freely from the press areas of the White House. Decl. of Nathan Fleischer [ECF No. 17-1] (“Fleischer Decl.”) ¶ 6. Second, a reporter may get a “day pass,” a daily credential issued upon application to the Secret Service. Id. ¶ 7. As discussed further below, day pass and hard pass holders can access the same parts of the White House at the same times. Id. ¶¶ 6–7. However, day pass holders must undergo additional initial security screening and be escorted from the White House gate to the press areas. Id. ¶¶ 7–9.

Ateba is the White House Correspondent for Today News Africa, an “online publication that focuses on relations between the United States and African nations.” Compl. ¶ 18. A longtime journalist, Ateba began covering the White House in 2018. Id. ¶¶ 38–39. For the first three years, he entered the White House with a day pass. Id. ¶ 39. From February 2021 through July 2023, he held a hard pass. Id. ¶¶ 40, 62. During his time as correspondent, Ateba has become increasingly frustrated by the reception he has received from the White House Press Office. Ateba asserts that he “has rarely received any response—or even acknowledgment—of his questions from the White House” and has been denied access to press conferences held by President Biden (even before he lost the hard pass). Id. ¶ 42; see id. ¶ 43. As a result, faced with this situation, Ateba claims he “resorted to one of the only options available to him: speaking up during press briefings.” Id. ¶ 45. Ateba is known to “shout[] his questions to the White House Press Secretary . . . during briefings . . . [and] speak over his fellow journalists.” Id. ¶ 47; see id. ¶¶ 47–52. In one notable incident, Ateba interrupted a press conference featuring the cast members of the comedy TV series “Ted Lasso,” who were invited to speak on mental health, to ask why he was not allowed to ask questions. Id. ¶ 49. Ateba’s outbursts have not ingratiated him with the White House Press Office or his fellow correspondents. Id. ¶¶ 48–53. His conduct has been the subject of considerable news coverage, and he received a letter from the White House warning him that his hard pass could be suspended or revoked if he continued disrupting press briefings. Id. ¶¶ 52, 58.

On May 5, 2023, the White House announced a new set of criteria for obtaining a hard pass: (1) full-time employment with a news organization; (2) a D.C.-area address; (3) access of the White House within the last six months for work; (4) an assignment to regularly cover the White House; (5) accreditation by a press gallery of the Supreme Court, the U.S. Senate, or the U.S. House of Representatives; and (6) willingness to submit to a Secret Service background check. Compl. ¶ 55; see Ex. A [ECF No. 1-1]. Ateba asserts that these new criteria were “targeted” at keeping him out of the White House. Compl. ¶ 57; see id. ¶ 54. Specifically, Ateba claims that “excluding [him] was the goal of the specific revisions” requiring press gallery accreditation, since “the White House knew he would not qualify for a hard pass under the new criteria.” Id. ¶ 60; see id. ¶ 61. He asserts that Supreme Court press passes are difficult to come by, and he argues that the criteria for obtaining a congressional press credential are subjective and prone to abuse, particularly as to journalists who, like him, have spoken out of turn. Id. ¶¶ 67–74. Ateba fears he will not be able to obtain a credential from the committees of journalists responsible for congressional press credentialing because, he contends, they are “insular and hostile to ‘outsiders,’” id. ¶ 74, and use an amorphous criterion of being a “bona fide correspondent[] of repute in the[] profession” to determine eligibility, id. ¶ 72; see also Mem. of Law in Supp. of Prelim. Inj. [ECF No. 2] (“Mot.”) at 19–20. The White House, for its part, notes that this same requirement of a congressional press gallery credential has been employed by many administrations, including those of Presidents Obama and Trump. See Opp’n at 3; Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 126 & n.3, 129.

Since the White House announced the new policy, Ateba has been unable to secure either accreditation. He was denied the requisite credentials by the Supreme Court and continues to await an answer regarding congressional press credentialing. Compl. ¶¶ 76–77.

Ateba’s hard pass expired when the new policy became effective on July 31, 2023. Compl. ¶¶ 54, 62. On August 4, 2023, he requested an extension of his prior hard pass, which was denied. Email from Allyson N. Bayless to Today News Africa (Aug. 6, 2023) [ECF No. 17-2]. He has not applied for a new hard pass, he says, because it would be futile without the required congressional or Supreme Court credential. Decl. of Simon Ateba [ECF No. 18-1] (“Ateba Decl.”) ¶ 6. Since the expiration of his hard pass, Ateba has sought a day pass on only one occasion. See id. ¶¶ 12, 15–16; Defs.’ Surreply in Opp’n to Pl.’s Mot. for Prelim. Inj. [ECF No. 20] (“Surreply”) at 1–2. His request was granted but he did not enter the White House. Surreply at 2. Ateba claims he was confused about whether the request was granted. See Ateba Decl. ¶ 17.

On August 10, 2023, Ateba simultaneously filed a complaint and a motion for a preliminary injunction, asking the Court to enjoin enforcement of the new hard pass policy and reinstate his hard pass for the duration of the litigation. He claims the White House Press Office engaged in viewpoint discrimination by adopting a hard pass policy intended to exclude him and impermissibly vested “unbridled discretion” in the congressional press gallery committees. Compl. ¶¶ 83–95. He further asserts that the Secret Service’s failure to provide a reasoned explanation for terminating his hard pass by allowing it to expire violates the APA. Id. ¶¶ 96–103. The preliminary injunction motion is fully briefed and ripe for resolution.

Legal Standard

“A preliminary injunction is ‘an extraordinary remedy that may only be awarded upon a clear showing that the plaintiff is entitled to such relief.’” Guedes v. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms & Explosives, 920 F.3d 1, 10 (D.C. Cir. 2019) (per curiam) (quoting Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008)). The moving party bears the burden of persuasion to establish that (1) it is likely to succeed on the merits; (2) it is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief; (3) the balance of equities tip in its favor; and (4) an injunction is in the public interest. Id. A failure to show irreparable harm is “grounds for refusing to issue a preliminary injunction, even if the other three factors entering the calculus merit such relief.” Chaplaincy of Full Gospel Churches v. England, 454 F.3d 290, 297 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

Analysis

Because preliminary injunctive relief is never warranted in the absence of irreparable harm, the Court may begin there. See, e.g., Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 297; Nat’l Treasury Emps. Union v. United States (“NTEU”), 927 F.2d 1253, 1254 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Thomas, J.). For purposes of this analysis, the Court will “assume[], without deciding, that [Ateba] has demonstrated a likelihood that the [White House’s] conduct violates the law.” Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 303. To satisfy this prong, Ateba must demonstrate harm that is “certain and great,” “actual and not theoretical,” “imminent” and “beyond remediation.” League of Women Voters of United States v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 7–8 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (quoting Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 297). In this Circuit, “a prospective violation of a constitutional right constitutes irreparable injury,” Gordon v. Holder, 721 F.3d 638, 653 (D.C. Cir. 2013), but only if the violation is “ongoing or ‘imminent.’” Singh v. Berger, 56 F.4th 88, 109 (D.C. Cir. 2022) (quoting Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 297) (cleaned up).

I. Alleged Deprivation of White House Access

Ateba argues that he faces irreparable harm because, without a hard pass, “he has extremely limited access to the White House press facilities . . . which substantially limits his ability to cover the White House for [Today News Africa].” Mot. at 23. While the parties are at odds over the equivalence of a day pass, certain facts are not in dispute. On a weekly basis, journalists can request links to a form that would allow them to register for visitor passes to enter the White House each day. Ateba Decl. ¶ 8; Fleischer Decl. ¶ 8. After a journalist submits this form, which includes biographical data, the Secret Service conducts a background check and authorizes access to the White House press areas. Fleischer Decl. ¶ 8; Mot. at 2. When a journalist visits the White House on a day pass, he must undergo additional security screening and then be escorted to the press areas. Compl. ¶ 39; Fleischer Decl. ¶¶ 7, 9. But once inside, the day pass allows a journalist to enter the White House grounds during the same times as a hard pass holder and attend the same press events. Fleischer Decl. ¶ 7; see Compl. ¶ 26. Ateba is eligible to apply for a day pass. See Suppl. Decl. of Nathan Fleischer [ECF No. 20-1] (“Fleischer Suppl. Decl.”) ¶ 3; Ateba Decl. ¶ 15. For three years before he obtained a hard pass, Ateba used day passes to enter the White House. Compl. ¶ 39; Surreply at 2.

Ateba disputes the convenience and reliability of this day pass system. He contends that it limits his ability to cover breaking news because he needs to request day pass links the Thursday prior and submit a form by 5:00 p.m. the day before he intends to access the White House. Ateba Decl. ¶¶ 8–9. He claims that it can be confusing whether a request for a day pass was in fact granted. Id. ¶¶ 14–17. And he asserts that journalists arriving on a day pass must wait “as much as a half hour” for an escort, which “mak[es] the process quite cumbersome.” Id. ¶ 11. Without a hard pass, Ateba says he is “unable to provide the quality of coverage of the White House that . . . [his] readers deserve.” Id. ¶ 5; see Compl. ¶ 27 (noting that the White House Correspondents’ Association has said a hard pass is necessary for a correspondent to “effectively perform his or her duties, which include providing the public with on-the-spot news coverage of unforeseen and unscheduled events, along with cataloguing the daily activities of the head of the executive branch” (quoting Br. of Amicus Curiae The White House Correspondents’ Association in Supp. of Appellee Seeking Affirmance at 3, Karem, 960 F.3d 656 (No. 19-5255))).

The White House, by contrast, characterizes the security clearance process as simple, requiring only a short form with the journalist’s biographical data. Fleischer Decl. ¶ 8. Security screening takes “[o]n average . . . one minute longer” for the journalist to clear security, although they “might need to wait for [an] escort . . . to the Press Area.” Id. ¶ 9. The White House submitted further evidence suggesting that a journalist can apply for a day pass shortly before arrival, irrespective of the policy Ateba describes requiring submission by 5:00 p.m. the day before. See Ateba Decl. ¶ 8. For example, on the one occasion Ateba sought a day pass since losing his hard pass, he requested the day pass application links at 9:40 p.m. on Sunday, August 27, 2023, and received them the next day at 9:07 a.m. Ex. 4 to Surreply [ECF No. 20-2]. He filled out the form by 11:00 a.m., and his same-day request to attend a press briefing was granted. Fleischer Suppl. Decl. ¶¶ 2–3.

Ateba contends that he is irreparably harmed by the loss of his hard pass, which requires him to use the day pass system when he plans to enter the White House. He claims that the D.C. Circuit’s holding in Karem, 960 F.3d 656, that a reporter suffered irreparable harm when his hard pass was merely suspended, supports his position. Mot. at 23. But in Karem, it was the fact of the suspension, without requisite Fifth Amendment due process, that squarely supported a finding of irreparable harm. 960 F.3d at 667–68 (citing Sherrill, 568 F.2d at 131). And, moreover, it appears that Karem (the reporter) was actually unable to access the White House. See id. at 665 (characterizing Karem’s punishment as a “month’s exile”). Ateba does not allege that he was denied due process,² and he can still access the White House with a day pass.

Rather, Ateba asserts that the deprivation of a hard pass causes irreparable harm to his First Amendment rights. The D.C. Circuit has recognized that “White House press facilities having been made publicly available as a source of information for [newspersons], the protection afforded newsgathering under the [F]irst [A]mendment guarantee of freedom of the press requires that this access not be denied arbitrarily or for less than compelling reasons.” Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 129

the White House issued this policy months in advance and gave Mr. Ateba an opportunity to apply for renewal of his hard pass—something he has not done—while simultaneously setting forth the standards and procedures that would govern both issuance of a hard pass in the first instance and revocation of a hard pass once granted.

Opp’n at 24. Ateba’s passing allegation of a Fifth Amendment violation in his reply brief will not be considered. See Pl.’s Reply in Supp. of Mot. for Prelim. Inj. [ECF No. 18] (“Reply”) at 14.

(footnote and citations omitted). Sherrill may imply that a journalist suffers a First Amendment harm when he or she is arbitrarily denied access to the White House press areas. But cf. Zemel v. Rusk, 381 U.S. 1, 17 (1965) (noting there is no general First Amendment right to enter the White House). Even accepting this premise, Ateba has not demonstrated that he has suffered harm since he still has access to White House press areas with a day pass. See Opp’n at 24. The Court recognizes that Ateba is inconvenienced by needing to fill out the form and wait on a press escort. Further, it is possible he would miss an event occurring on short notice because he had not requested credentials in advance. But this latter result may be avoided if Ateba applies for a week’s worth of day passes in advance, even if he is unsure whether he will use them. Ultimately, he remains able to enter the White House using the day pass system, which, on the evidence before the Court, appears to be an acceptable alternative for the duration of the litigation.

Ateba points to a recent Ninth Circuit order in support of his position that being required to use a day pass instead of a hard pass constitutes irreparable harm. A panel of that court recently concluded that a journalist was irreparably injured when he was excluded from Maricopa County press briefings because “constitutional injury is not ‘rendered de minimis or otherwise mitigated by requiring [him] to avail [himself] of a less desirable, even if somewhat effective alternative.’” Reply at 19 (quoting TGP Commc’ns, LLC v. Sellers, No. 22-16826, 2022 WL 17484331, at *6 (9th Cir. Dec. 5, 2022)). But that journalist, unlike Ateba, was denied access to the briefings and left to watch a livestream. See TGP Commc’ns, 2022 WL 17484331, at *6 (describing “the County’s exclusion of [the journalist] from its limited forum”); cf. Consumer’s Union of U.S., Inc. v. Periodical Correspondents’ Ass’n, 365 F. Supp. 18, 26 (D.D.C. 1973) (condemning arbitrary “[e]xclusion from the [congressional] press galleries”), rev’d on other grounds, 515 F.2d 1341 (D.C. Cir. 1975). On the evidence before the Court, Ateba has not made a “clear showing,” Winter, 555 U.S. at 22, that denial of access to the White House is “likely to occur,” Henke v. Dep’t of Interior, 842 F. Supp. 2d 54, 59 (D.D.C. 2012), such that he would be irreparably harmed during the litigation.

II. Other Alleged Harms

Ateba further argues that “adoption of an unconstitutional hard pass eligibility policy that infringes on the freedom of the press is itself irreparable harm that justifies a preliminary injunction.” Mot. at 23. It is often said that when a party seeks a preliminary injunction to prevent the deprivation of a First Amendment right, the only question for the Court is whether “the deprivation is shown to be likely.” Archdiocese of Wash. v. Wash. Metro. Area Transit Auth., 897 F.3d 314, 334 (D.C. Cir. 2018). Because a “prospective violation of a constitutional right constitutes irreparable injury,” Gordon, 721 F.3d at 653, even if it lasts only “minimal periods of time,” Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976), a preliminary injunction should issue if the violation is shown to be likely to occur and the plaintiff is likely to succeed on the merits, Archdiocese of Wash., 897 F.3d at 334.

However, “[t]hat abstract principle must be applied to the relevant factual setting.” Getty Images News Servs. Corp. v. Dep’t of Def., 193 F. Supp. 2d 112, 123 (D.D.C. 2002). It is not enough to “merely allege a violation of freedom of expression in order to satisfy the irreparable injury prong.” Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 301; see also Sanders v. McClellan, 463 F.2d 894, 903 (D.C. Cir. 1972) (weighing “indirect and incidental chill” of government action that did not result in “direct suppression of speech or press”). A plaintiff “must show that their ‘First Amendment interests are either threatened or in fact being impaired at the time relief is sought.’” Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 301 (quoting NTEU, 927 F.3d at 1254–55). Where speech is not directly curtailed, a plaintiff must “demonstrate that the allegedly impermissible government action would chill allowable individual conduct.” Id. at 301.

The D.C. Circuit’s opinion in NTEU is instructive. See Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 301. NTEU involved a suit by government employees to enjoin an ethics law prohibiting them from receiving compensation for delivering speeches or writing articles. 927 F.2d at 1253–54. The D.C. Circuit affirmed the denial of a preliminary injunction since the employees failed to show they would “cease speaking or writing before the district court resolves their constitutional challenges.” Id. at 1255. Since the employees could still get reimbursed for their expenses, it was unconvincing that they were unable to afford to continue engaging in First Amendment activities. Id. And any lack of financial incentive to “continue writing or speaking” was a “foreseeable long-term effect[]” that “did not entitle the [plaintiffs] to preliminary, injunctive relief.” Id.

Because the White House policy does not limit what Ateba can publish, his bare assertion that the policy violates the freedom of the press does not suffice to establish a likelihood of irreparable harm. And Ateba has not demonstrated the hard pass policy is likely to chill his newsgathering activities to the detriment of his readers. Ateba has indicated that, despite the difficulties he faces without a hard pass, he “will continue to cover the White House” and remains “determined to continue providing quality coverage for his readers.” Compl. ¶ 81. The evidence suggests he will be able to do so: “For his first three years covering the White House, Mr. Ateba obtained a temporary daily press pass” Id. ¶ 39; see Opp’n at 25. And since his hard pass expired, he has only tried to seek entry to the White House one time. Ateba asserts that on the prior two occasions the White House held a press briefing in August, he was not aware in time to request a day pass. Ateba Decl. ¶ 13. It is not clear to the Court whether this was a failure of Ateba’s diligence or the White House Press Office’s advance planning. In any event, the fact that the White House was willing to clear an 11:00 a.m. request for access, see Fleischer Suppl. Decl. ¶¶ 2–3, suggests Ateba could cover most if not all press briefings, allowing him to gather the news and deliver it effectively to his readers. See Getty Images, 193 F. Supp. 2d at 123 (finding no irreparable harm when it was unclear how the challenged regulation would affect journalists’ right of access to Guantanamo Bay).

Ateba also argues that his speech (and that of other journalists) will be chilled because his “efforts to fight the White House’s de facto policy of never calling on him made [him] unpopular with colleagues in the press corps,” and accordingly the new policy “requires” him and other journalists to “self-censor so that they can ingratiate themselves with their colleagues” who decide whether he can obtain the press gallery credential that is now a prerequisite to obtaining a White House hard pass. Mot. at 20. This alleged harm is too speculative to support relief, particularly in light of the evidence Ateba supplies of his own behavior—years of acting in ways that disgruntle other correspondents, despite the contemporaneous cost to his relationship with the White House. See Compl. ¶¶ 46–53. While self-censorship could possibly be a “long-term effect” of the hard pass policy, the evidence at this stage does not support a finding that First Amendment interests are “threatened or in fact being impaired.” NTEU, 927 F.2d at 1255 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Finally, in reply, Ateba argues that he suffers a competitive harm because he is at a “disadvantage to the other White House journalists who are allowed to have hard-pass access.” Reply at 20. The Court has found on the evidence before it that Ateba retains access to the White House facilities on substantially similar terms. Indeed, he has the very access most reporters do in terms of entry. To the extent “Mr. Ateba’s competition gets more—and more efficient—access to the White House press areas and the President,” id. at 19, any resulting competitive harm is unlikely to “accrue ‘in the absence of preliminary relief’—that is, before the district court can resolve the case on the merits.” Singh, 56 F.4th at 109 (quoting Winter, 555 U.S. at 20).

In sum, the Court concludes that Ateba has not demonstrated a likelihood of irreparable harm. Hence, a preliminary injunction is not warranted.

For the foregoing reasons, and upon consideration of the entire record herein, it is hereby ORDERED that [2] plaintiff’s motion for a preliminary injunction is DENIED; it is further ORDERED that the following schedule shall govern further proceedings:

1. Defendants shall file any motion for summary judgment, including any Administrative Record, by not later than September 20, 2023. Briefing shall be limited to 25 pages.
2. Plaintiff shall file any opposition to defendants’ motion combined with any cross-motion for summary judgment by not later than October 4, 2023. Briefing shall be limited to 25 pages.
3. Defendants shall file any reply in support of their motion combined with any opposition to plaintiff’s cross-motion by not later than October 11, 2023. Briefing shall be limited to 15 pages.
4. Plaintiff shall file any reply in support of his cross-motion by not later than October 18, 2023. Briefing shall be limited to 15 pages.

THIRD DECLARATION OF NATHAN FLEISCHER
ASSISTANT TO THE SPECIAL AGENT IN CHARGE
PRESIDENTIAL PROTECTIVE DIVISION
UNITED STATES SECRET SERVICE

I, Nathan Fleischer, do hereby declare, subject to penalty of perjury pursuant to 28 U.S.C.
§ 1746, as follows:

1. I previously submitted a declaration in support of Defendants’ Opposition to the Plaintiff’s Motion for a Preliminary Injunction, ECF No. 17-1, as well as a supplemental declaration in support of Defendants’ Surreply in Opposition to the Plaintiff’s Motion for a Preliminary Injunction, ECF No. 19-2. I have been asked to file this declaration in support of Defendants’ Motion for Summary Judgment.
2. I make the statements in this declaration in support of Defendants’ Opposition to the Plaintiff’s Motion for a Preliminary Injunction based on my own knowledge and experience and upon review of information provided to me in my official capacity by others who work in the United States Secret Service.

3. The United States Secret Service (Secret Service) is a protective and law enforcement agency operating under the provisions of Title 18 of the United States Code, sections 3056 and 3056A. The Secret Service is charged with responsibility for the protection of the President and Vice President of the United States and their immediate families, former Presidents of the United States and their spouses, major Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates, foreign heads of state visiting in the United States, and other high-level governmental officials as designated by statute or by the President. This responsibility is accomplished through both physical protection and the investigation of potential threats to these protectees.
4. I am currently employed as the Assistant to the Special Agent in Charge in the Worker and Visitor Entry System (WAVES) Section of the Presidential Protective Division. I have held that position since June 19, 2022. As the Assistant to the Special Agent in Charge in the WAVES Section of the Presidential Protective Division, I have supervisory responsibility over WAVES. The WAVES section is responsible for the processing and reviewing of all requests for entry to the White House Complex, as well as the issuance of all White House Complex security passes.
5. I have been employed by the Secret Service as a special agent for over fifteen years. Prior to becoming the Assistant to the Special Agent in Charge in the WAVES Section of the Presidential Protective Division, I worked as an Assistant to the Special Agent in Charge in the Counter Assault Division of the Special Operations Division. I have also served as a member of Counter Assault Team for six years and as an instructor for the Counter Assault program. Prior to that time, I worked in the Washington Field Office as a special agent conducting investigations of financial crimes and performing a variety of protection assignments.

White House Complex Entry Passes and Processes

6. In furtherance of the protective mission, the Secret Service issues passes to those individuals seeking access to the White House Complex. There are three types of press passes that can be issued for access to the White House complex. These are the permanent press pass (sometimes called a “hard” pass), a temporary press pass (sometimes called a “day” pass), and an appointment press pass, which is not at issue here.
7. A hard pass allows a member of the press to access the White House Complex between the hours of 0530-2230. With a hard pass, the press member is authorized to access press offices, the press apron, the North Grounds Stand Up Area, and the Driveway (referred to as “Pebble Beach”) (collectively the “Press Area”).
8. A day pass also allows a member of the press to access the White House Complex between the hours of 0530-2230. With a day pass, the press member must initially be escorted from the entrance checkpoint to the Press Area, but once there has access to the same areas as those press members with a hard pass. The press member does not need to be escorted once they have entered the Press Area.

9. A day pass is acquired by filling out a link to the WAVES system that is generated by the White House Press Office. The Secret Service does not have a role in determining who the White House Press Office invites to fill out a WAVES link. An applicant will fill out a form that requires biographical data such as the press member's full name, date of birth, and social security number. This is the same process utilized by routine visitors to the White House Complex. Once the USSS conducts the necessary security checks, the press member is then cleared to enter the White House Complex.
10. As a practical matter, a press member with a day pass may not get through the security checkpoint as quickly as those press members with a hard pass because the Uniformed Division Officer must check the press member's photo identification against the identifying information provided in the WAVES system. On average, it may take one minute longer and rarely would it exceed two minutes longer for those press members with a day press pass to clear security than those with a hard pass. Once through security, the press member with a day pass might also need to wait for his or her escort to arrive at the checkpoint to escort them to the Press Area.

The Secret Service's Role in the Issuance of Hard Passes

11. With respect to the issuance of hard passes, the White House Press Office provides the United States Secret Service WAVES section with a list of the names and requisite personal identifying information of those members of the press that have met the Press Office's criteria for obtaining or renewing a hard pass to the White House Complex.

12. The Secret Service WAVES Section performs the necessary security checks with respect to those members of the press on the hard pass list provided by the Press Office. If an individual member of the press successfully passes the security screening, and does not currently possess a hard pass, the White House Press Office will make an appointment for that press member to come to the White House Pass Office, which is operated by the Secret Service, to have their picture taken in order to create a hard pass. If the press person has an existing hard pass, the WAVES section will renew the existing hard pass by extending the expiration date in WAVES.
13. The Secret Service has no role in generating the list of press members that the White House Press Office authorizes for a hard pass. The Secret Service's role in the process of authorizing entry into the White House complex is limited to conducting the necessary security checks and the issuance/renewal of the physical hard pass to the individual press member.
14. The Secret Service has not changed its policy, procedure, or position with respect to its role in the issuance of press passes of any type.
15. On August 1, 2023, the White House Press Office instructed the Secret Service to deactivate the hard passes that did not meet the White House Press Office's requirements for renewal, including Mr. Ateba's. Approximately 500 hard passes were deactivated.

Simon Ateba's Access to the White House Complex

16. Simon Ateba did not seek to obtain a day pass to enter the White House Complex between when his hard pass expired on July 31, 2023 and when he submitted a

WAVES request the morning of Monday, August 28, 2023. Mr. Ateba was authorized through the WAVES system to access the White House Complex that same date, although he did not access the White House Complex that day.

17. Since August 28, 2023, Mr. Ateba has requested day pass access to the White House and he was authorized through the WAVES system to access the White House Complex each time he sought entry. I further understand that Mr. Ateba entered the White House on several of those occasions.

APA Claim

18. I have been advised that Count III of Plaintiff's complaint alleges that the Secret Service violated the Administrative Procedure Act by deactivating Mr. Ateba's hard pass. The Secret Service did not make any decision to deny Mr. Ateba a hard pass; rather, the White House Press Office included Mr. Ateba's name on a list of hard passes that did not meet the requirements for renewal under the existing hard pass guidelines. The Secret Service deactivated unrenewed hard passes, including Mr. Ateba's, at the White House Press Office's direction.

In accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 1746, I hereby certify and declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

Case No. 1:23-cv-02321-JDB

SECOND DECLARATION OF SIMON ATEBA

I, Simon Ateba, hereby declare:

1. I am the plaintiff in the above-captioned matter. I am above the age of 18, and I make this declaration from my own personal knowledge. If called upon to testify to the contents below, I could and would do so competently.

2. I am the White House Correspondent for Today News Africa, an online news publication focusing primarily on American politics and relations between the United States and African countries.

3. As part of my duties as a White House Correspondent, I regularly communicate questions to the White House Press Office while in the designated Press Area. I also regularly post on social media from the White House Press Area—which is a superior vantage point from which to report breaking news about the President and his administration.

4. During press briefings, I regularly post my reporting from the White House Press Area out to my social media followers, including my 528,000 followers on X (formerly Twitter).

5. I have been covering the White House since 2018.

6. I held a White House hard pass from February 2021 until August 1, 2023.

7. When I first obtained a White House hard pass in February 2021, the White House did not require applicants first be credentialed by the Supreme Court or a Congressional Press Gallery.

8. Prior to obtaining a White House hard pass, I used the White House day pass.

9. Without a White House hard pass, I am unable to provide the quality of coverage of the White House that I wish to provide and that my readers deserve to receive.

10. I have not yet applied for a hard pass under the new criteria adopted by the White House because I know I do not qualify. On June 5, 2023, I applied for press credentials with the Congressional Daily Press Gallery. On August 30, 2023, I was informed by the Congressional Daily Press Gallery staff that my application is under consideration. I will apply for a White House hard pass if and when I receive a Congressional press pass.

11. I have been informed by the Daily Press Gallery staff that congressional Press credentials expire at the end of every Congressional session and must be renewed.

12. The day pass is an inadequate substitute for a hard pass for the following reasons:

- a. Advance Application: Day passes require applicants to submit their requests by 5:00 p.m. the previous day, which is not conducive to covering breaking news. For reporters covering the White House regularly, news events often occur spontaneously and without prior notice.
- b. Limited Access: Day pass holders are required to be escorted to the Press Area. Obtaining an escort upon arrival can be time-consuming, with waits of up to 45 minutes, making it impractical for timely news coverage. This delay can be especially problematic during weekends when staffing levels may be lower.

- c. Repetitive Applications: Regular White House reporters would need to submit new applications every day, every week, and every month for day passes, which adds administrative burdens and complicates the reporting process.
- d. Unplanned Visits: For breaking news situations, journalists may not have planned to be at the White House, making it impossible to meet the advance application deadline for day passes.
- e. Internet Accessibility: Because day pass applications typically require online submission by 5:00 p.m., they sometimes pose challenges for reporters facing technical issues with either their computers or internet access.

13. Before I acquired a hard pass, this day-pass process was cumbersome and required me to expend additional time each day before I could access the White House Press Area.

14. This process also precluded me from attending spontaneous press events at the White House. Day pass links for the upcoming week are released every Thursday. Requests for the links can be sent to presswaves@who.eop.gov. Once you've made a request, the White House press office then sends forms for each desired day. If you miss this deadline, entry will be denied.

I, Simon Ateba, declare under penalty of perjury that the factual allegations in the foregoing SECOND DECLARATION OF SIMON ATEBA are true and correct.

Case No. 1:23-cv-02321-JDB

PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE

Plaintiff Simon Ateba hereby requests the Court to take judicial notice of the following public records and information from government websites under Rule 201 of the Federal Rules of Evidence:

1. Brief of Amicus Curiae The White House Correspondents' Association, Karem v. Trump, Case No. 19-5255 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 13, 2020) (Attached as RJN Exhibit A).
2. Transcript of Oral Decision, CNN v. Trump, 1:18-cv-02610-TJK, at *7:19–22 (D.D.C. Nov. 16, 2018), Decision (ECF 22) (Attached as RJN Exhibit B).
3. Congressional News Media and the House and Senate Press Galleries 4, Congressional Research Service (April 13, 2017), available at <https://crsreports.congress.gov/product/pdf/R/R44816> (Attached as RJN Ex. C).
4. Periodical Press Gallery, Accreditation, House Periodical Press Gallery, available at <https://periodical.house.gov/accreditation> (Attached as RJN Ex. D).
5. Senate Daily Press Gallery, Governing Rules, available at <https://www.dailypress.senate.gov/membership/gallery-rules/> (Attached as RJN Ex. E)

These materials are the appropriate subjects of judicial notice because they are “generally known within [this] court’s territorial jurisdiction” and “can be accurately and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned.” Fed. R. Ev. R. 201(b). As demonstrated in the Declaration of Eric A. Sell, attached hereto as Ex. F, the materials were obtained from websites administered by the federal government. Because the materials are “public records and government documents available from reliable sources,” they are also the proper subjects of judicial notice under Rule 201. Johnson v. Comm'n on Presidential Debates, No. CV 15-1580 (RMC), 2016 WL 4179269, at *4 (D.D.C. Aug. 5, 2016); see also Juliana v. United States, No. 6:15-CV-01517-AA, 2018 WL 9802138, at *2 (D. Or. Oct. 15, 2018) (collecting cases in which federal courts took judicial notice of reports from the Congressional Research Service).

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should take judicial notice of the aforementioned public records and information from government websites.

I. SOURCE OF AUTHORITY

Amicus curiae the White House Correspondents' Association has obtained consent to file this brief from all parties and therefore may file it pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29(a)(2) and Circuit Rule 29(b).

II. IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Amicus curiae is the White House Correspondents' Association ("WHCA"), a nonprofit association incorporated in the District of Columbia, whose primary mission is to advocate for the newsgathering rights of the press on behalf of journalists who cover the White House and on behalf of Americans who rely on the press to provide information about the activities of their elected officials. Founded over 100 years ago, in February 1914, the WHCA has consistently and effectively worked to ensure that the men and women who gather and report the news from the White House have the ability to seek answers from powerful officials, up to and including the President of the United States. The WHCA has 439 regular members and 152 associate members who represent over 100 different print, television, radio, and online journalism outlets.

The WHCA was founded on the belief, as expressed by this country's Founders and enshrined in the First Amendment, that an independent news media is vital to the health of the republic. The ability of the people to effectively govern themselves depends upon a free press' vigorous and regular coverage of those who hold power in trust. When government officials—including the President of the United States and his Press Secretary here—attempt to restrict, curtail, intimidate, or silence the press in its newsgathering activities, the rights of the people and the press, as guaranteed by the First Amendment, are infringed, and our democratic form of government is placed in jeopardy.

Plaintiff and the district court have outlined in compelling detail the constitutional violations caused by the actions of the President and Press Secretary in connection with the suspension of Plaintiff’s hard pass. Amicus WHCA submits this brief, as authorized by its Board, to highlight the extent and breadth of the danger posed to all White House journalists, and to the American public, if the Court accepted the Defendants’ unprecedented assertion that the White House Press Secretary may exclude from the White House any journalist whose conduct she might deem “unprofessional.”

III. SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Defendants contend that the White House Press Secretary should have absolute discretion to strip a hard pass—an essential tool for those who cover the White House—from any White House correspondent whose conduct she might deem “unprofessional.” As discussed below, the Court should reject this dangerous legal position as unworkable and unconstitutional for at least three reasons. First, whether a particular journalist’s conduct in a particular situation is “unprofessional” is largely subjective. Second, journalistic “professionalism” is highly context-dependent. And third, particularly in the current climate, empowering the Press Secretary to be the “professionalism” arbiter would risk severely chilling White House correspondents from providing the White House reporting on which our democracy depends. After all, knowing that the Press Secretary could eliminate their ability to do their job just by classifying their conduct as “unprofessional,” would White House correspondents necessarily feel comfortable asking tough or aggressive questions or reporting information that could reflect negatively on the administration?

IV. ARGUMENT

As explained by Todd J. Gillman—a WHCA Board Member and Washington Bureau Chief for The Dallas Morning News—in his Declaration attached to Plaintiff’s injunction papers, “[a] hard pass is critical for anyone who reports regularly on the White House.” JA77-79 (Gillman Decl. at ¶¶ 1, 2, 9). It is no exaggeration to say that, without the access that a hard pass grants, a White House correspondent cannot effectively perform his or her duties, which include providing the public with on-the-spot news coverage of unforeseen and unscheduled events, along with cataloguing the daily activities of the head of the executive branch. See JA827-828 (Mem. Op. at 21-22). Yet the President and his Press Secretary assert that the Press Secretary may take away any White House correspondent's hard pass as long as she (and she alone) deems that person's conduct "unprofessional." Appellants' Br. at 22-25. Moreover, they contend that the Press Secretary's "professionalism" decision is not subject to judicial review. See id. at 34-35.

The Defendants' position is deeply troubling to WHCA's members, as it should be to the public at large, and WHCA urges this Court to follow the district court's lead in roundly rejecting it. Indeed, arming the White House Press Secretary—the President's agent for dealing with the press, an institution that he has branded an "enemy of the people" and purveyor of "fake news," Appellee's Br. at 10—with absolute discretion to deny White House access based on such a vague "professionalism" standard would threaten the free flow of information about the President and his administration that is so crucial to the functioning of our democratic system. The Defendants insist that "[t]he concept of professionalism reflects expectations of professional conduct understood and adhered to by millions of Americans every day," and that there is therefore no problem with having the continued possession of a hard pass turn on the Press Secretary's administration of that "concept." Appellants' Br. at 29. The Defendants are wrong. For at least three reasons, the "the-Press-Secretary-thinks-it's-unprofessional" barometer for which they advocate is both unworkable and unconstitutional for White House correspondents.

First, whether a particular journalist’s conduct in a particular situation is “professional” or “unprofessional” is largely subjective. Conduct in the course of newsgathering that one person classifies as the former, another person could easily classify as the latter. As the district court put it, “[s]uch abstract concepts may at times indicate what is allowed and disallowed at the furthest margins, but they do not clearly define what is forbidden or permitted in common practice within those margins.” See JA822 (Mem. Op. at 16). For example, questioning of the President or a White House aide that appears overbearing, rude, or harassing—and therefore “unprofessional”—to one observer might reasonably be viewed by another as simply the dogged pursuit of the truth.

Second, along with being subjective, journalistic “professionalism” is highly context-dependent. The district court correctly noted that White House events “vary greatly in character” and that “[w]hat is deemed ‘professional’ behavior in the context of a state dinner may be very different from what is considered ‘professional’ behavior during a performance by James Brown.” JA823 (Mem. Op. at 17). And in this administration—with the elimination of the daily press briefing, Appellee’s Br. at 9—White House correspondents must rely almost exclusively on an unpredictable hodgepodge of informal, freewheeling, and often chaotic questioning opportunities that do not lend themselves to any sort of uniform “professionalism” standard.

Third, making the Press Secretary the “professionalism” arbiter compounds these problems exponentially. The relationship between the press and the White House is, by design, adversarial. As the Supreme Court put it, “the press serves and was designed to serve as a powerful antidote to any abuses of power by governmental officials, and as a constitutionally chosen means for keeping officials elected by the people responsible to all the people whom they were selected to serve.” Mills v. Alabama, 384 U.S. 214, 219 (1966). During the current administration, that adversarial relationship has, of course, risen to a new and disturbing level. The President regularly doles out to the media reproaches of “fake news” and “enemy of the people” and has even endorsed violence against reporters. Appellee’s Br. at 10.

By all appearances, in the eyes of the President and his administration, asking tough questions, bringing to light abuses of power, and airing criticisms of the administration is “unprofessional”—indeed, treasonous—press conduct. But in the eyes of the press and the Supreme Court, such conduct is precisely what the job of a journalist demands.

A framework that permits the White House Press Secretary—an agent of the President—to exclude a journalist from the White House based on her own evaluation of that journalist’s “professionalism” thus leaves White House correspondents with an untenable, unconstitutional, speech-chilling choice: avoid any newsgathering activity that might tend to offend the President or raise the ire of one of his senior aides, on the one hand, or risk losing the access required to effectively do their job, on the other hand. In the Press Secretary's own words, she suspended Mr. Karem's hard pass in order to "deter Mr. Karem and other members of the press" from engaging in further conduct that she might deem unprofessional. JA at 146-47 (Aug. 16, 2019 Grisham Letter at 8-9) (emphasis added). That desired and likely "deter[rent]"—AKA chilling—effect makes it essential that this Court affirm the district court and thereby help ensure the continued free flow of information from and about the White House to the millions of people who depend on it to decide the future course of the republic.

V. CONCLUSION

For all of these reasons, the White House Correspondents' Association requests that the Court affirm the district court's decision and reject the Defendants' dangerous legal position.

P R O C E E D I N G S

THE DEPUTY CLERK: Your Honor, this is civil matter 18-2610, Cable News Network, Incorporated, et al., v. Donald J. Trump, et al.

Will counsel please approach the lectern and state your appearance for the record.

MR. BOUTROUS: Good morning, Your Honor. Theodore Boutrous for Plaintiffs CNN and Jim Acosta.

THE COURT: Good morning, sir.

MS. CHAMPION: Good morning, Your Honor. Anne Champion from Gibson Dunn for Plaintiffs CNN and Jim Acosta.

MR. LIPSHUTZ: Good morning, Your Honor. Joshua Lipshutz from Gibson Dunn for Plaintiffs CNN and Jim Acosta.

THE COURT: Good morning.

MR. BURNHAM: Good morning, Your Honor. James Burnham here on behalf of the defendants, along with Michael Baer, Eric Womack and Joseph Borson.

THE COURT: All right. Good morning to you all.

We are here for an oral ruling on the plaintiffs' application for a temporary restraining order.

And I'd better get some water right away here.

(Brief pause.)

On November 7th, 2018, President Trump held a news conference at the White House. Soon after it started, he called on Plaintiff Acosta, a reporter for CNN, to take a

1 question from him. After Mr. Acosta asked several questions
2 about the caravan of migrants heading to the U.S.-Mexican 3 border, the President indicated that he wanted to move on to 4 call on another reporter but Mr. Acosta would not be seated
5 and continued trying to ask his question and then he would 6 not give up the microphone, even when approached by an 7 intern employed by the White House Press Office who 8 attempted to retrieve it from him. The President made
9 several comments toward Mr. Acosta while this happened,
10 including, You are a rude, terrible person, and, When you
11 report fake news which CNN does a lot, you are an enemy of 12 the people. Eventually, Mr. Acosta did relinquish the 13 microphone.

14 That night, his Secret -- the Secret Service asked
15 Mr. Acosta to relinquish his hard pass, his credential that 16 allows him access to the White House press facilities. That 17 same evening, the White House Press Secretary, Sarah 18 Sanders, posted a video on Twitter purporting to show the 19 exchange between Mr. Acosta, the intern and the President.
20 In a tweet, Ms. Sanders cited the conduct in the video as 21 the reason that Mr. Acosta's hard pass had been revoked. In 22 a tweet, she characterized Mr. Acosta as placing her hand --
23 his hands on the intern and she also asserted that Mr.
24 Acosta had been disrespectful to his colleagues to not allow 25 them to -- the opportunity to answer a question.

1 The next day, on November 8th, CNN sent a letter
2 to the White House requesting that Ms. -- the reporter's
3 credentials be reinstated immediately. CNN alleged that the 4 White House simply did not like the content of the questions
5 posed to the President and threatened to take legal action
6 if the revocation was not reversed.

7 The next day, on November 9th, the President
8 suggested that other reporters might have their credentials
9 revoked and that reporters must treat the White House with 10 respect and treat the presidency with respect and he also 11 conceded that Mr. Acosta's -- but he also conceded that Mr.
12 Acosta's conduct toward the Press Office intern had not been 13 overly horrible.

14 Then the long holiday weekend intervened. And on 15 the morning of Tuesday, November 13th, CNN and Mr. Acosta
16 filed this lawsuit and moved for a temporary restraining 17 order.

18 That morning, after -- the same morning, after the 19 suit was filed, Ms. Sanders issued a written statement
20 setting forth reasons for the revocation of Ms. -- Mr.
21 Acosta's hard pass. It read: We have been advised that CNN
22 has filed a complaint challenging the suspension of Jim 23 Acosta's hard pass. This is just more grandstanding from 24 CNN and we will vigorously defend against this lawsuit.
25 CNN, who has nearly 50 additional hard pass holders, and Mr.

1 Acosta is no more or less special than any other media
2 outlet or reporter with respect to the First Amendment.
3 After Mr. Acosta asked the President two questions, each of 4 which the President answered, he physically refused to 5 surrender a White House microphone to an intern so that 6 other reporters might ask their questions. This was not the 7 first time this reporter had -- has inappropriately refused
8 to yield to other reporters. The White House cannot run an 9 orderly and fair press conference when a reporter acts this 10 way which is neither appropriate nor professional. The 11 First Amendment is not served when a single reporter, of 12 more than 150 present, attempts to monopolize the floor. If 13 there is no check on this type of behavior, it impedes the 14 ability of the President, the White House staff and members
15 of the media to conduct business.

16 To obtain a temporary restraining order, the 17 plaintiffs must clearly demonstrate, one, a likelihood of 18 success on the merits of their claim; two, a likely 19 irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief;
20 three, a balance of the -- that the balance of the equities
21 is in their favor; and, four, that the TRO is in the public
22 interest. And where the Government is the party opposing 23 the TRO, the Court merges the latter two factors into a 24 single inquiry.

25 Much of our discussion at the hearing the other

1 day concerned the applicability or inapplicability of the 2 D.C. Circuit case Sherrill v. Knight. I'm going to first
3 talk about the likelihood of success of [sic] the merits
4 with regard to the plaintiffs' Fifth Amendment due process
5 claim.

6 Much of our discussion at the hearing concerned
7 the applicability of Sherrill v. Knight. I've read the case
8 closely and I think it's fair to conclude, as the Government
9 argued, that there are at least some portions of it that 10 plaintiffs would rely on that are fairly characterized as 11 dicta, but if Sherrill stands for anything at all, I think 12 it's unavoidable to conclude that it -- to conclude anything
13 other than it stands for the Fifth Amendment's due process
14 clause protects a reporter's First Amendment liberty
15 interest in a White House press pass. Whether that's a 16 holding I agree with or not is another thing, but that is 17 not relevant. The case has not been abrogated and, as a 18 district judge, I must apply the precedent of this circuit
19 as I see it.

20 So let me quote from Sherrill. Quote, In our 21 view, the procedural requirements of notice and the factual
22 basis for denial and opportunity for the applicant to 23 respond to these and a final written statement of the 24 reasons for denial are compelled by the foregoing
25 determination that the interest of a bona fide Washington

1 correspondent in obtaining a White House press pass is
2 protected by the First Amendment. This First Amendment
3 interest undoubtedly qualifies as liberty which may not be 4 denied without due process of law under the Fifth Amendment.

5 A few more words about Sherrill before I move on.

6 The Government argued that the holding of Sherrill
7 is limited to Secret Service restrictions based on security
8 concerns, and the Government points out there's nothing in 9 the record here that the security of the President or the 10 White House is at issue, but Sherrill, as I read it,
11 provides no reason why the court's recognition of a First 12 Amendment interest in a press pass -- in a White House press
13 pass would turn on whether that decision to limit that 14 interest was made by the White House Press Office or the 15 Secret Service or any other part of the executive branch,
16 and the case suggests no reason to me why the due process
17 required to deny someone a pass would turn on a specific 18 component of the executive branch that made that decision.
19 The court was very clear that the basis of this interest was 20 rooted in the First Amendment and not the decision of any 21 part of the executive branch to agree that Sherrill should 22 be granted the press pass.

23 The Government also made the point that there is 24 case law for the proposition that the public doesn't have a
25 general First Amendment right to enter the White House

1 grounds. I have no quarrel with that at all, but Sherrill
2 holds that once the White House opens a portion of it up to 3 reporters for their use, some kind of First Amendment
4 liberty interest protected by a due process right is 5 created, and I simply have no choice but to apply that 6 precedent here.

7 The Government also argued that some of the 8 factual underpinnings of Sherrill had changed and that 9 today, the White House routinely exercises discretion in 10 different ways, giving out hard passes to certain
11 journalists aside from whatever review the Secret Service
12 undertakes for security purposes. I can see how that might 13 be relevant in examining the nature of whatever liberty
14 interest Sherrill holds is at stake here, but even assuming 15 that was a distinction that would make a difference in terms
16 of how I apply Sherrill, I don't have any evidence in the 17 record here; I don't have any declarations or sworn 18 statements that explain how that factual landscape has 19 shifted since Sherrill was decided.

20 And, finally, the Government makes the point that 21 the First Amendment does not restrict the ability of the 22 President to dictate the terms of how he chooses to engage 23 or not engage with any particular journalist. That seems 24 entirely correct to me, but nothing in the holding of 25 Sherrill relating to the Fifth Amendment due process right

1 it recognized contradicts that. In fact, Sherrill
2 explicitly recognizes the President's right to engage with 3 whomever he pleases. Certainly, he need not ever call on 4 Mr. Acosta again. But under Sherrill, as I read it, the 5 government must provide Mr. Acosta due process if it is to 6 revoke his hard pass. Accordingly, the likelihood that the 7 plaintiffs succeed on the First -- on the Fifth Amendment
8 claim hinges on whether the government provided adequate due
9 process to Mr. Acosta. The court in Sherrill held that this 10 process must include notice, an opportunity to rebut the 11 government's reasons and a written decision. And all the 12 court -- although the court in Sherrill did not have 13 occasion to address it, when an important interest is at 14 stake and when the government is able to provide this 15 process before deprivation, it generally must do so. There
16 is no evidence that one of the few exceptions to this rule
17 would apply here such as some kind of emergency. So I do 18 hold that plaintiffs have demonstrated a likelihood of 19 success on their claim that adequate process was not 20 provided to Mr. Acosta. Indeed, whatever process occurred 21 within the government is still so shrouded in mystery that 22 the Government could not tell me at oral argument who made
23 the initial decision to revoke Mr. Acosta's press pass --
24 his hard pass.

25 On the notice, as for notice, the Government

1 points to only one statement that could possibly constitute
2 prior notice to Mr. Acosta that his pass would be revoked,
3 the President's statements to him during the exchange at the 4 press conference on November 7th, but the President's
5 statements did not revoke -- did not reference Mr. Acosta's
6 hard pass at all, let alone that it would be revoked;
7 therefore, that statement cannot have put him on notice of 8 the government's intention to revoke it.

9 Now, it is true that the public and Mr. Acosta
10 were eventually provided two things. First, explanations as 11 to why his hard pass was revoked through Ms. Sanders's
12 tweets; and a written statement of explanation, apparently 13 prompted by this litigation, but given their timing and 14 their lack of connection to Mr. Acosta's opportunity to 15 rebut -- which we'll talk about in a moment -- these belated
16 efforts were hardly sufficient to satisfy due process.

17 As for Mr. Acosta's opportunity to be heard in 18 rebuttal, the Government points to the letter CNN sent to 19 the White House the day after his hard pass was revoked, but 20 this does not reflect a meaningful opportunity to rebut the 21 government's reasons for the revocation or to challenge the 22 appropriateness of the government's action. Indeed, anyone
23 can avail themselves of the mail, and there's nothing in the 24 record that demonstrates that whoever the decisionmaker --
25 the initial decisionmaker was in this case read or

1 considered the letter. And, of course, the letter was sent 2 after the revocation, not beforehand. The need for the 3 opportunity to be heard seems especially important in this 4 case when the record strongly suggests that one of the 5 initial specific reasons for the revocation cited by the 6 government -- that Mr. Acosta laid his hands on the White
7 House intern -- was likely untrue and was at least partly 8 based on evidence that was of questionable accuracy.

9 At oral argument, the Government made the point
10 that more process would not have helped here because the 11 ultimate decisionmaker -- I believe, is how the Government
12 referred to the President -- at a minimum, ratified this 13 action. Maybe that's so, but on the record before me which, 14 at this point, is devoid of evidence concerning who, in the 15 government, first reached this decision; how they reached 16 the decision; whether they considered CNN's letter or 17 whether they considered potential other responses by the 18 government, I simply cannot assume that that would be so.

19 So in light of all the above, I find that the 20 plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits of their 21 Fifth Amendment due process claim.

22 I'll now talk about irreparable harm with regard
23 to that claim.

24 The plaintiffs also must demonstrate that 25 irreparable harm will result in the absence of preliminary

1 relief. That harm must be both certain and great, and it
2 must be actual and not theoretical. Here, harm to Mr.
3 Acosta has already occurred. As already explained, he's 4 demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits of his 5 claim that his Fifth Amendment due process rights were 6 violated such that his liberty interests were deprived;
7 therefore, I don't need to speculate or theorize as to 8 whether harm will occur absent preliminary relief, but for 9 plaintiffs to satisfy their burden, the harm must be 10 irreparable. Constitutional injuries are often considered
11 irreparable due to their very nature. Indeed, the D.C.
12 Circuit has held that, quote, Suits for declaratory and 13 injunctive relief against the threatened invasion of a 14 constitutional right do not ordinarily require proof of any 15 injury other than the threatened constitutional deprivation
16 itself, closed quote.

17 On the other hand, procedural due process injuries
18 do not necessarily cause irreparable harm when, for example, 19 the thing that is deprived is tangible property, because the 20 due process violation that led to that injury might be 21 reparable with money damages. Here, the procedural due
22 process violation at issue that has led to the deprivation
23 -- to a deprivation of what Sherrill requires me to 24 recognize as a liberty interest as opposed to a property
25 interest that's grounded in, quote, The First Amendment

1 guarantee of freedom of the press, closed quote.

2 Moreover, the First Amendment interests, as 3 recognized in Sherrill, were not vested merely in 4 publications or agencies. They were liberties of the 5 individual journalists themselves. For that reason, that 6 CNN may still send another journalist or other journalist to 7 the White House does not make the harm to Mr. Acosta any 8 less irreparable. Each day that he is deprived of that 9 interest without the process prescribed by the court in 10 Sherrill, he suffers a harm that cannot be remedied in 11 retrospect. The Court cannot restore his access to press
12 briefings that have already occurred or to conversations in 13 the White House press facilities that have already been had.

14 And so on this highly, highly unusual set of facts
15 and interests at stake, I do find that the plaintiffs have 16 met their burden of establishing that irreparable harm has 17 and will continue to occur in the absence of preliminary 18 relief.

19 The next factors are the balance of the equities
20 and the public interests.

21 In balancing the equities at stake, I find that 22 the harm to Mr. Acosta from sustaining an ongoing violation
23 of his Fifth Amendment due process rights outweighs the 24 government's interest in orderly, respectful press
25 conferences. This is especially so because the government

1 can serve its stated interest in other ways during this
2 litigation or perhaps until it is back before me arguing
3 that their due process obligations had been fulfilled.
4 Obviously, the balance of the equities would not likely have
5 come out this way if Mr. Acosta had been excluded for safety
6 or security reasons, in which case, my deference to the 7 executive equities would be far, far higher. But even in 8 this circumstance, I don't take lightly the executive
9 branch's weighty general interest in control of its White
10 House press facility, but the balance here is tipped by the 11 fact that Sherrill obligates me to recognize the violation
12 of Mr. Acosta's due process rights and the resulting impact 13 on his First Amendment interests. So in finding -- also, in 14 finding that these factors favor the plaintiffs, I have also 15 considered case law that suggests that constitutional
16 violations are always contrary to the public's interest.

17 So because the plaintiffs have shown a likelihood 18 that the government has violated Mr. Acosta's Fifth
19 Amendment rights under Sherrill, because the type of injury
20 he has suffered is irreparable and because the public
21 interest in the balance of equities favor granting a
22 temporary restraining order, I will grant the application
23 for a -- for the temporary restraining order here. I will 24 order the defendants immediately restore Mr. Acosta's hard
25 pass until further order of the Court or the restraining

1 order expires. And if, at some point after restoring the 2 hard pass, the Government would like to move to vacate the 3 restraining order on the grounds that it has fulfilled its 4 due process obligations, then it may, of course, do so and I
5 will promptly address that and then the remaining bases for 6 the TRO.

7 I want to emphasize the very limited nature of 8 today's ruling. In resolving this TRO, I haven't -- because 9 I've found that it must be granted on -- as to the due
10 process claim, I haven't had to reach the plaintiffs' First 11 Amendment claim at all in which they alleged that the 12 government engaged in viewpoint or content discrimination.
13 So I want to make very clear a couple of things. I have not 14 determined that the First Amendment was violated here; I 15 have not determined what legal standard would apply to the 16 First Amendment claim here; I have not determined the 17 specific nature of the First Amendment interest that 18 Sherrill recognizes -- or that Sherrill at least doesn't 19 describe but recognizes, yes; and I haven't determined what 20 portions of Sherrill, if any, would bind me on those 21 questions.

22 So let me turn to the parties, then, and suggest 23 that as far as procedurally moving forward goes, one -- the 24 avenue I thought of is to give you all some time to consult 25 with your clients; assess your positions; and come back

1 early next week -- perhaps Tuesday afternoon -- to see how
2 you all would like to proceed from here. I trust the --
3 this litigation will continue in a rapid pace. Either
4 party?

5 MR. BOUTROUS: Thank you. Thank you very much,
6 Your Honor.

7 That sounds like a good process to us. We can
8 confer. We may be able to just confer and then report back
9 Monday with the proposal and see if we can work out either a 10 briefing schedule for the preliminary injunction or 11 something else and, if not, we can just come back and see 12 you on Tuesday.

13 THE COURT: All right. So your proposal would be 14 a written joint report for the parties --

15 MR. BOUTROUS: Would that --

16 THE COURT: -- on Monday?

17 MR. BOUTROUS: Yeah. Would that work for the 18 Court?

19 THE COURT: All right. That's fine, if that's -- 20 but I'd like to hear from Mr. Burnham.

21 MR. BURNHAM: Your Honor, I'd like to talk to our 22 clients. That should be okay, but I'd just like to talk to 23 our clients and come up with a proposal before we --

24 THE COURT: Absolutely. I mean, we can't have any 25 quicker turnaround than a joint report --

1 MR. BURNHAM: Right.

2 THE COURT: -- on Monday. So --

3 MR. BURNHAM: Right.

4 THE COURT: I mean, I --

5 MR. BURNHAM: The timing certainly works for us.

6 Thank you.

7 THE COURT: Fair enough. So I'll get that report.

8 Obviously, if you can agree on something, great; if you
9 can't agree, if you would still submit it jointly but just 10 lay out your respective positions on where we go from here,
11 I'll take that under advisement, and my hope is -- well,
12 depending on what you all agree to, if we need to come back
13 to court next week, even though it's the short week -- the 14 holiday -- I will be available to do that.

15 MR. BURNHAM: Okay. Thank you, Your Honor.

16 THE COURT: All right.

17 MR. BOUTROUS: We greatly appreciate it, Your 18 Honor.

19 THE COURT: All right.

20 MR. BOUTROUS: And then just procedurally, under 21 the TRO, we'll just proceed to get the hard pass back
22 immediately and have it reactivated. Thank you very much.

23 THE COURT: Yes. Is there any other -- anything
24 further -- else from the plaintiffs that you think I need to 25 address today before I turn to Mr. Burnham?

1 MR. BOUTROUS: I think that's it, Your Honor.

2 THE COURT: All right.

3 MR. BOUTROUS: Thank you.

4 THE COURT: Sir?

5 MR. BURNHAM: So Your Honor, under the local 6 rules, our opposition to the PI is due on Tuesday.

7 THE COURT: Okay.

8 MR. BURNHAM: Would it be okay, given all that's 9 going on, to suspend that deadline until we file our joint 10 status report?

11 THE COURT: Yeah. I assume the plaintiffs --

12 MR. BURNHAM: I assume --

13 THE COURT: -- would agree to that.

14 MR. BURNHAM: We haven't spoken about it.

15 THE COURT: Yes.

16 MR. BOUTROUS: That's fine with --

17 MR. BURNHAM: Okay.

18 MR. BOUTROUS: That's fine with us, Your Honor.

19 THE COURT: Yeah. So that deadline certainly will 20 be, you know, held in abeyance --

21 MR. BURNHAM: Thank you, Your Honor.

22 THE COURT: -- vacated until I get your report and 23 we'll see where we go from there.

25 THE COURT: All right.

1 MR. BOUTROUS: Thank you.

2 THE COURT: If there's nothing further, then,
3 counsel's dismissed.

4 THE DEPUTY CLERK: All rise. This Honorable Court
5 is adjourned.

Congressional News Media and the House and Senate Press Galleries

Summary

The House and Senate press galleries provide services both for journalists and for Members of Congress. The news media helps Members communicate with the public, and enables the public to learn about policy initiatives, understand the legislative process, and observe elected officials representing their constituents. In the earliest Congresses, news reports commonly provided the most comprehensive record of congressional proceedings, even for Members themselves, because few official documents were kept. To accommodate the press, and in response to its growth through the mid-19th century, the House and Senate established formal press galleries in 1877, providing resources and organization for journalists reporting from the Capitol. This report provides information about the rules and authorities that affect media coverage of Congress, current practices among the press galleries, and selected data on gallery membership since the 94th Congress. It also provides a brief discussion of considerations that commonly underlie the galleries' practices or may affect gallery operations and congressional media rules.

Although they are separate entities, the House and Senate press galleries have traditionally operated under the same governing rules, approved by the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. Additionally, chamber rules addressing use of electronic devices, photography, and recording or broadcasting of audio and video, also affect journalists covering Congress. Increasingly, non-journalists may also be able to effectively report news from the Capitol with handheld Internet-connected devices. Many elements of the original press gallery rules have persisted over time, and include provisions to preserve journalistic independence from encroachment by Congress. One key feature that helps preserve this independence is the delegation of many gallery responsibilities to correspondents' committees, comprised of gallery members, and to nonpartisan House and Senate staff. Requirements for press credentials, along with other gallery practices, also reflect a balance between ensuring congressional access for professional reporters while managing the limited space and resources available in the Capitol.

Today, four correspondents' committees exist to oversee the seven congressional press galleries: one for the House and Senate daily press galleries; one for the House and Senate periodical press galleries; one for the House and Senate radio/television galleries; and one for the Senate press photographers' gallery. Credentials from a correspondents' committee provide journalists with access to the relevant House and Senate galleries and office resources. Each committee's credentialing requirements, along with other gallery rules and the names of accredited journalists and news outlets, are published in the Official Congressional Directory.

The congressional press galleries also provide services for Members of Congress and staff. This can include distributing press releases or helping to facilitate Member communications with journalists. Members can use a number of sites around the Capitol Complex for press conferences or interviews. Some of these locations need to be reserved through a particular press gallery. Press gallery staff can also assist Members with media logistics and security for certain events.

Although the press galleries have retained similar structures and practices over the years, changes in gallery membership and broader trends in how news is produced and distributed may be relevant as the House, Senate, and correspondents' committees consider the existing rules related to media coverage of Congress and the press galleries. Since the 94th Congress, for example, the number of credentialed correspondents has grown, particularly for the radio/television galleries, but the number of outlets they represent has decreased. Cable and satellite television and the Internet allow for smaller, more specialized news outlets to exist, yet many news outlets are consolidated under larger parent companies. Additionally, journalists making use of the multimedia capacities of Internet-based journalism may find it difficult to categorize themselves under the current gallery structure.

Introduction and Origins of Press Galleries

Reporters have covered Congress since its earliest sessions. Press coverage of Congress and other government institutions helps inform citizens about public policy, the legislative process, and representation. It is also thought to improve government accountability.¹ As the number of reporters and news outlets covering Congress increased during the 1800s, the House and Senate established formal press galleries, resources, and administrative rules to help manage the Capitol press corps while preserving its access and independence.

The first congressional reporters mainly transcribed the floor debates and provided more detailed accounts of congressional proceedings than what was available in the official records maintained in the House Journal and the Senate Journal.² This information, sometimes provided by Members of Congress themselves, would be sent as correspondence to newspaper publishers outside the capital area. Known correspondents were often permitted on the chamber floors so that they could better hear the proceedings, but correspondents were sometimes restricted to the public galleries. By the middle of the 1800s, each chamber had established its own designated reporters' gallery space.

In 1877, the House and Senate decided to create a committee of correspondents to oversee press gallery membership and administration.³ The Official Congressional Directory first published a list of 86 correspondents entitled to admission to the reporters' galleries in 1880⁴ and published press gallery rules in 1888.⁵ Separate galleries and correspondents' committees now exist for the daily printed press, periodical press, radio and television press, and press photographers. Correspondents' committees, often upon request of gallery members, may propose changes to their gallery rules, subject to the approval of the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

Today, the congressional press galleries provide services both for journalists and for Members of Congress. For the media format and chamber it represents, each press gallery is typically responsible for credentialing journalists, maintaining Capitol workspace for correspondents, and coordinating coverage for news conferences, hearings, and other congressional events. The press galleries also distribute press releases; provide the press with information on floor proceedings, upcoming rules, amendments, and legislation; provide information on committee hearings, witness testimony, and mark-ups; and deliver messages or facilitate Member communications with journalists. In addition to these regular responsibilities, the House and Senate press galleries

² Today, much of this information is officially available in the Congressional Record from the Government Publishing Office (GPO), but the Record was not published until 1873. Precursors to the Record, including the Annals of Congress (1789-1824), Register of Debates (1824-1837), and the Congressional Globe (1833-1873), were compiled by private publishers and varied in the scope of their coverage. take on additional roles during presidential elections, overseeing arrangements and credentialing for daily press at the national political conventions and presidential inaugurations.

The degree of autonomy granted to each press gallery and correspondents' committee results from responsibilities bestowed upon them by the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. Many rules and practices are similar across the different galleries and correspondents' committees. Additional House and Senate chamber rules that apply generally to photography, use of electronic equipment, and audio and video recording or broadcasting in the Capitol may also affect how members of the press cover Congress.

Due to the similarities across galleries, this report first presents the general rules and authorities that affect the press galleries and media coverage of Congress, followed by the credentialing requirements that the galleries typically share. Key distinctions between the daily press galleries, periodical press galleries, radio and television galleries, and press photographers' gallery are then discussed. To highlight some of the changes in gallery composition over time, data are provided comparing the number of gallery members and news outlets represented in 10-year intervals between the 94th Congress (1975-1976) and the 114th Congress (2015-2016). The report concludes with a brief discussion of some of the considerations that commonly underlie the galleries' practices and some current developments in news production and distribution that may affect the congressional press galleries.

General Authorities for Media and Press Galleries

The House and Senate press galleries have historically operated under a unified set of governing rules, approved by the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.⁶ The rules established for each press gallery type, and the names of gallery members, are published in the Official Congressional Directory. Because the galleries are creations of each chamber, separate House and Senate authorities are responsible for their own galleries, and each chamber hires its own administrative gallery staff. In practice, however, the galleries may often coordinate with one another on a number of matters. The sections below provide more details on press gallery rules and authorities for the House and for the Senate. A third section addresses the shared delegation of responsibilities from the chambers to the correspondents' committees, which began in 1877.

House of Representatives

Media access to the House of Representatives is subject to the discretion and control of the Speaker of the House. This tradition was first established by a House resolution in 1838 enabling the Speaker to admit press representatives to the floor.⁷ When the new House chamber was completed in 1857, a designated press space was created in the gallery above the Speaker's chair, and the rules of the House were amended to allow the Speaker to grant press gallery access.⁸ The press gallery was outfitted by the superintendent of the House with “desks and seats, and conveniences for taking notes,” and a room was also reserved for the use of telegraph companies and reporters.⁹ In 1939, language was added to the House rules designating a portion of the gallery for radio, wireless, and similar correspondents, who were subject to rules similar to those that applied to print reporters.¹⁰

Today, the Speaker’s role in regulating gallery admission and floor access for daily print and periodical journalists is found in Rule VI, clause 2, of the Rules of the House of Representatives. This clause also states that the Standing Committee of Correspondents will supervise the daily press gallery and designate its employees, and that the Executive Committee of Correspondents for the Periodical Press Gallery will perform those same functions for the periodical gallery. The Speaker’s role in regulating gallery admission and any floor access for radio and television journalists is found in Rule VI, clause 3, which also delegates radio/TV gallery supervision and designation of its employees to the Executive Committee of Radio and Television Correspondents’ Galleries.¹¹ The professional staff who operate the House press galleries report to the Chief Administrative Officer and Committee on House Administration.

Senate

Records indicate that in 1838, the Senate adopted rules granting floor privileges to local newspaper reporters, and in 1839, the Senate Committee on the Contingent Fund recommended that gallery seats be reserved for reporters.¹² Initially, the vice president oversaw the Senate press gallery. On March 12, 1873, the Senate agreed to a resolution that gave the Rules Committee jurisdiction over the Senate press gallery and authorized that the committee provide no more than one gallery seat to each newspaper. Additionally, a seat on the floor could be reserved for Associated Press reporters.¹³ In 1939, the Senate amended its existing rules to include reporters transmitting news via radio, wire, wireless, and similar media.¹⁴

Under the current Standing Rules of the Senate, Rule XXV, paragraph 1(n)(1), provides the Committee on Rules and Administration with the general authority to make rules and regulations for the Senate floor and galleries.¹⁵ Further directives providing the Committee on Rules and Administration with authority to make rules and regulations for the reporters' galleries and related press facilities on the Senate side of the Capitol are found in Rule XXXIII, paragraph 2.¹⁶ Rule VI of the Rules for Regulation of the Senate Wing provides additional details on admission to and administration of each of the Senate press galleries, and notes that the Sergeant at Arms is responsible for maintaining order in the galleries.¹⁷ The professional staff who operate the galleries report to the Senate Sergeant at Arms and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

Correspondents' Committees

Since 1877, the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration have provided for the correspondents' committees to make many of the decisions related to the operation of the galleries.¹⁸ One correspondents' committee exists per gallery type, which helps ensure that gallery practices are consistent between the chambers, even as the House and Senate maintain separate gallery facilities. Four correspondents' committees exist today: one for the House and Senate daily press galleries; one for the House and Senate periodical press galleries; one for the House and Senate radio/TV galleries; and one for the Senate press photographers' gallery.

A main responsibility of each correspondents' committee is determining which journalists receive congressional press credentials. Press credentials may be offered on a temporary or permanent basis,¹⁹ and they entitle journalists admission to a particular gallery type in both the House and the Senate, along with access to the resources provided by the gallery's office. Changes to press gallery rules or credentialing requirements may be suggested by the correspondents' committees on behalf of gallery members, but are subject to the approval of the Speaker of the House and the Committee on Rules and Administration.²⁰

Correspondents' committee members must be members in good standing of the gallery they oversee. They are selected by fellow gallery members in accordance with the rules set by that gallery. This system is thought to help preserve the independence of the press corps by removing it from direct congressional influence. It is also thought to help maintain journalistic integrity in the congressional press corps, as the rules agreed upon by gallery members reflect commonly held professional norms and standards of the news industry.²¹

As gallery members themselves, correspondents' committee members must remain primarily employed as journalists. The day-to-day management of the gallery facilities is instead tasked to professional, nonpartisan staff members hired by the House and Senate to operate the press facilities for each media type. Press gallery staff for each chamber report to the Chief Administrative Officer and the Committee on House Administration or the Senate Sergeant at Arms and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

Related Rules Affecting Media in Congress

In addition to the House and Senate rules that directly address the operation of the press galleries, other provisions in each chamber's rules affect media coverage of Congress. For more information on these topics, see CRS Report R44665, Video Broadcasting of Congressional Proceedings, by Sarah J. Eckman. Many of these provisions address photography or the broadcasting or recording of audio and video. The press gallery rules regulate these activities for credentialed correspondents, yet handheld electronic devices, like smartphones, have made it technologically possible for individuals who are not reporters to capture and transmit visual and/or audio materials.

Some of these rules prohibit certain activities to preserve decorum in the chamber, like photographing or broadcasting proceedings, or prohibit use of particular electronic devices on which these activities might occur. In the House and Senate galleries, for example, use of cameras and electronic devices is generally prohibited.²² These provisions apply to any individual, including accredited journalists. The widespread ability to report news from smartphones and other handheld Internet-connected devices may be a relevant consideration for broader chamber rules and policies like these regarding photography, broadcasting, or use of electronic devices.

Other rules enable the House, the Senate, and committees within each chamber to broadcast their own proceedings. Live audio and video feeds and past recordings of floor proceedings have been produced by the House since 1977,²³ and by the Senate since 1986.²⁴ Employees of the House

Recording Studio and the Senate Recording Studio are responsible for operating the recording equipment for each chamber. Accredited radio/TV correspondents may request access to these audio or video feeds to rebroadcast, as long as the footage is used for news or public affairs programs, not for commercial or political purposes. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 enabled the House and Senate to allow photographic, radio, and television coverage of proceedings, subject to additional rules established by each committee.²⁵

Today, the House and Senate also provide live and archived video of floor proceedings on their websites, enabling anyone with an Internet connection to access these official video feeds. Beginning in 2010, the House made floor videos available under the direction of the Clerk of the House.²⁶ The Senate began providing floor videos on its website in January 2012 under the direction of the Sergeant at Arms.²⁷

Typical Press Credentialing Requirements

Press credentialing requirements are published in each edition of the Official Congressional Directory, and are often available on the press gallery websites. Press credentials admit individual journalists to the congressional press galleries and allow journalists access to the resources provided for their medium, like workspace in the Capitol. The Official Congressional Directory also lists the names of the individuals who hold current permanent credentials for each gallery and the news organizations represented.²⁸

Each correspondents' committee administers its own credentialing requirements at the start of every Congress, subject to the approval of the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. Journalists seeking press credentials must submit a new application at the start of every Congress to continue their gallery membership. Temporary credentials may be available to journalists who do not meet all of the gallery's regular requirements. These requirements are typically similar across the galleries and have been consistent over time. Generally, to receive a press credential from a congressional gallery, an individual

- must be a correspondent for that medium, in good standing at a reputable employing organization;
- must be primarily employed as a journalist;
- cannot pursue any claim before Congress or another department of government;
- cannot be employed by the U.S. government or a foreign government; and

Every four years, each correspondents' committee is also responsible for providing press credentials for the presidential nominating conventions and inauguration. Beyond these basic parameters, each gallery may set additional credentialing requirements.

Daily Press Galleries

The original House and Senate press galleries were established in the 1800s for members of the daily printed press, which today includes newspapers, wire services, and electronic news organizations. Correspondents seeking daily press credentials must work for a publication that either (1) publishes daily and holds general publication periodicals mailing privileges from the U.S. Postal Service; or (2) has been in publication continuously for 18 months and has as its principal business “the daily dissemination of original news and opinion of interest to a broad segment of the public.”²⁹

The daily press galleries are overseen by the Standing Committee of Correspondents. The Standing Committee of Correspondents is comprised of members of the daily press gallery who are elected to two-year terms.³⁰ Day-to-day operations of the daily press galleries are managed by professional staff members from each chamber. The House press gallery offices are located in H-315 - H-319 and employ four professional staff. The Senate press gallery offices are located in S-316 and employ seven professional staff.³¹

Although the Standing Committee of Correspondents is responsible for accreditation decisions, the Senate press gallery office serves as a liaison between the committee and the journalists, receiving applications, supporting materials, or fees submitted by journalists. In addition to other credentialing requirements, journalists in the daily press galleries must reside in the Washington, DC, area.

Periodical Press Galleries

The periodical press galleries of the House and Senate include correspondents working for magazines, newsletters, and non-daily newspapers or online publications. These periodicals must “regularly publish a substantial volume of news material of either general, economic, industrial, technical, cultural, or trade character” and “require Washington coverage on a regular basis.”³²

The periodical press galleries are overseen by the Executive Committee of Correspondents, which is comprised of seven periodical press correspondents. The Executive Committee of Correspondents is elected by periodical press gallery members every two years, coinciding with the start of a new Congress. Credentialing responsibilities rotate between the administrative staff of the House and Senate periodical galleries every four years.³³ The House periodical press gallery offices are located in H-304 and employ four professional staff. The Senate periodical press gallery offices are located in S-320 and employ three professional staff.

Radio and Television (Radio/TV) Galleries

The radio and television galleries provide credentials for members of broadcast media outlets. The Senate radio/TV gallery coordinates the application process, but credentialing decisions are made by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries. The Executive Committee is comprised of seven members.³⁴

Electronic recording or broadcasting equipment is generally prohibited in the chamber galleries, but radio/TV gallery credentials enable journalists to rebroadcast the floor audio and video footage produced by the House and the Senate. The radio/TV galleries also maintain broadcast and recording studio spaces, which can be used by any correspondent with congressional credentials.

In addition to the services provided to journalists, the radio/TV galleries also provide assistance to Members of Congress. The radio/TV galleries manage reservations from Members and congressional staff seeking to hold press conferences in various locations around the Capitol Complex. The radio/TV galleries can also assist Members with media logistics and security for these events.

House Radio/TV Gallery and Related Resources

The House radio and television gallery is located in H-320 and employs seven professional staff. The House radio/TV gallery manages reservation requests for Members' press conferences at the "House Triangle,"³⁵ and provides information about other press conference locations suitable for radio or television coverage.³⁶ Upon the invitation of an accredited journalist, and subject to other gallery rules, Members may host press conferences in the House radio/TV gallery's Capitol

Other locations throughout the Capitol may be used by Members for broadcast media events, but are not managed by the House radio and television gallery. Committee rooms, for example, may be available by contacting the committee of jurisdiction; events in HC rooms on the House-side of the Capitol may be available by contacting the Speaker's Office. Gallery staff can assist Members with logistics for events in these locations.³⁹

Senate Radio/TV Gallery and Related Resources

The Senate radio and television gallery is located in S-325 and employs six professional staff. The Senate radio/TV gallery manages reservation requests for Senators' press conferences outside the Capitol building at the "Senate Swamp,"⁴⁰ and provides information about other press conference locations suitable for radio or television coverage.⁴¹ Upon the invitation of an accredited journalist, and subject to other gallery rules, Senators may host press conferences in the Senate radio/TV gallery's Capitol Visitor Center (CVC) studio.⁴² The Senate studio may also be used by journalists seeking exclusive interviews with Senators.

Senators may use other locations in the Capitol for broadcast media events that are not managed by the Senate radio and television gallery. Committee rooms, for example, may be available by contacting the relevant committee. Rooms in the CVC, including SVC-200/201 may be available from the Committee on Rules and Administration; S-211 may be available from the Secretary of the Senate; and S-207 may be available from the Sergeant-at-Arms. Gallery staff can assist Members with logistics for events in these locations.⁴³

The Press Photographers' Gallery provides credentials for news photographers and assists in facilitating photographic coverage of the House and the Senate. The photo gallery offices are located on the Senate side of the Capitol, in S-317, and employ three professional staff. There is

The Standing Committee of Press Photographers is a six-member board that is responsible for the administration of the photographers' gallery. Members of the photo gallery elect standing committee members each year, no later than March 31. The Press Photographers' Gallery rules also state that the standing committee must include one member from Associated Press Photos; Reuters News Pictures or AFP Photos; a magazine; a local newspaper; and an agency or freelance photographer. No organization may have more than one representative on the standing committee at any time.

Gallery Membership in Selected Years

The news media environment has changed in a number of ways over the last several decades, and some of these changes are reflected by the composition of the congressional press galleries. Data regarding press gallery membership was collected from the Official Congressional Directory for 10-year intervals representing Congresses between 1975 and 2015. The changes in gallery membership and the current composition of the galleries may be relevant to consideration of the rules governing the press galleries or the resources allocated across different galleries.

Table 1 provides the number of credentialed congressional correspondents in selected years, subdivided by gallery type. Credentials provide correspondents with access to the galleries and associated offices, but at any one time, it is unlikely that all eligible correspondents would be working from the Capitol. Between the 94th and the 114th Congresses, the overall number of accredited congressional journalists more than doubled, growing from 2,588 credentialed correspondents in 1975 to 6,016 in 2015. These findings suggest that, consistent with other measures to increase congressional transparency since the 1970s, more journalists have access to Congress today than in the past.

Table 2 provides the number of credentialed news outlets in selected years, subdivided by gallery type. Correspondents may be credentialed as representatives of multiple news outlets, and although the number of accredited correspondents has increased, the number of media outlets they represent has diminished by more than half, decreasing from 1,272 in 1975 to 581 in 2015. This may reflect broader trends in the news industry, including the consolidation of smaller media outlets into larger entities.⁴⁴

Notes: Counts represent the number of entities listed as the media services represented in the Official Congressional Directory for each gallery. Records available in the Official Congressional Directory can vary across years; in some years and for some outlets, a news organization and its parent organization are listed separately, resulting in some duplication and overestimation of these counts. Freelance reporters are listed as a category in the Official Congressional Directory but are excluded from the counts of radio/television and press photographer organizations.

Figure 1 and Figure 2 illustrate how the proportion of journalists and outlets holding credentials from the daily press, periodical press, radio/TV, and press photographers galleries compare between the 94th Congress (1975-1976) and the 114th Congress (2015-2016). The number of accredited correspondents increased for all the press galleries during this time period, but the number of radio/TV correspondents grew most substantially, as shown in Figure 1. In the 114th Congress, a majority of the congressional correspondents (58%) held radio/TV credentials, whereas only 28% of correspondents held radio/TV credentials in the 94th Congress. This change likely reflects the growth of video-based cable and satellite news that occurred during the same time period. The same dynamic may also be reflected in the larger proportion of credentialed radio/TV news outlets, relative to outlets in other gallery types, as shown in Figure 2.

Additional Considerations and Developments

The basic operating structure of the House and Senate press galleries has remained relatively unchanged over the years. This system is comprised of independent correspondents' committees, which establish gallery rules and credentialing requirements; professional nonpartisan administrative staff who manage day-to-day gallery operations; and the House Speaker and Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, which retain authority over the galleries' operations. This division of responsibilities, along with the longstanding gallery rules, has generally addressed potential concerns regarding conflicts of interest or infringements on press freedom. Occasionally, the congressional press galleries have adapted to significant changes in the news media environment; one key example was the establishment of the radio and television galleries in 1939.

Independence of Correspondents' Committees

Although the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration must formally approve of gallery rules and are responsible for oversight, the galleries themselves run fairly autonomously. Nonpartisan, professional personnel operate the galleries on a daily basis, and the correspondents' committees are responsible for many decisions, including accreditation of journalists. The independence of the correspondents' committees from Congress is an important feature of how the press galleries operate, helping to maintain a boundary between the two. Prior to the 1877 establishment of the first correspondents' committee, observers were concerned that, at times, Members seemed too close to the press, and at other times, were somewhat antagonistic to the press.⁴⁵ Some observers continue to voice similar concerns,⁴⁶ but generally, this separation is thought to improve media accountability and ensure that press access to Congress is not contingent on favorable coverage.⁴⁷ Independence of correspondents' committees is also thought to relieve concerns about government infringements on the freedom of ⁴⁵ The publication of congressional documents not authorized for release occurred several times throughout the mid-1800s, illustrating both the close access reporters could have to Congress and how that could lead to tension between Congress and the press. Reporters were arrested and detained by the Senate Sergeant at Arms both in 1848 and in 1871 for publishing treaties that they obtained but were not yet public. Press coverage of congressional scandals also led to greater tensions between Members and reporters. See Marbut, pp. 105-107.

⁴⁶ For example, see Bruce D. Collins, "Journalists as Congressional Agents—Legal Confusion and Conflict in the Radio and Television Gallery," CommLaw Conspectus, vol. 21, no. 2 (2013), pp. 298-335.

⁴⁷ Examples of tension between Members and reporters date back to the first Congress, and during these early years, sometimes affected press access to the chambers. See McPherson, p. 69. For a more general discussion of government and press relations, see also Martha Joynt Kumar and Alex Jones, "Government and the Press: Issues and Trends," in The Press, eds. the press,⁴⁸ since the press—and not any agent of the House or Senate—is largely responsible for formulating and enforcing its own rules.⁴⁹

Establishing and Maintaining Journalistic Standards

The system of press credentialing requirements and associated gallery rules can be viewed as ways to establish and maintain certain journalistic standards for congressional reporters. Many of the current rules can be traced back to the first rules created in the late 1800s. Press credentialing requirements originated, in part, as a way to ensure legitimate news reporters had access to Members of Congress while preventing lobbyists—who sometimes posed as reporters—from gaining similar access to advance their own agendas. In these early years, congressional staff sometimes also served as newspaper correspondents, leading to concerns about conflicts of interest and occasional speculation that staff might be responsible for the publication of unreleased information.⁵⁰

The rules of the galleries continue to prohibit accredited journalists from participating in lobbying, paid advocacy, or advertising activity on behalf of any individual, corporation, organization, political party, or federal government agency. Credentialed correspondents must also be primarily employed as journalists, as concerns have been raised that additional sources of income may affect correspondents' impartiality.⁵¹ Occasional questions have also been raised about whether the disclosure requirements are sufficient and achieve their intended aims, or if enforcement of the rules by independent correspondents' committees introduces the risk that committee members may, at times, be somewhat permissive regarding their peers' activities.⁵²

In addition to these individual-level restrictions, the media outlets that employ congressional correspondents must be editorially independent of any entity that lobbies the federal government. By excluding individuals and organizations that have a clear connection to policy advocacy, these rules help assure Members of Congress that congressional correspondents are primarily interested in reporting the news and are not seeking access in the interest of promoting their own policy objectives.

⁴⁸ Congressional initiatives that would have required honoraria disclosure from journalists, for example, have raised these types of concerns. See “Right Job, Wrong Tool,” editorial, Boston Globe, August 15, 1995, p. F4; Debra Gersh Hernandez, “Senator Wants to Monitor Reporters’ Incomes,” Editor & Publisher, vol. 128, no. 32 (August 12, 1995), p. 9, at <https://www.editorandpublisher.com/news/senator-wants-to-monitor-reporters-incomes-p-9/>; Rep. Charles T. Canady, remarks in the House, Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 141, part 23 (November 16, 1995), pp. H13135-H13136; Rep. Barney Frank, Ibid., pp. H13136-H13137; David A. Schultz, “The Truth Behind the Truth in Reporting Proposal,” Editor & Publisher, vol. 128, no. 49 (December 9, 1995).

New Media Environment and Gallery Operations

Changes in how news is produced and distributed have sometimes led the House, Senate, and correspondents' committees to revisit the existing rules, facilities, and administration related to the congressional press. Once radio became a popular news format, for example, the House and Senate rules were amended to include radio reporters, and the chambers created the radio and television galleries.⁵³ Since the addition of the radio/TV galleries, the overall structure of the congressional press galleries has remained fairly unchanged. Within that structure, new facilities for the existing galleries became available in 2008 upon the completion of the Capitol Visitor Center (CVC). Those who study the news industry have observed several trends in recent decades that may affect the composition of congressional press gallery membership and may be relevant to consideration of congressional rules or resources related to the galleries.⁵⁴

Television, for example, has become the predominant news source for most Americans and many prefer to watch cable networks, which can include more editorializing than the broadcast networks.⁵⁵ If it appears that journalists representing these outlets are advocating for particular interests, this might contradict the spirit of the longstanding lobbying and advocacy prohibitions in the press gallery rules. Media consolidation trends sometimes raise similar concerns, if a large corporation owns news outlets along with other holdings that may be affected by federal policies or regulations.⁵⁶

Internet-based news represents another important development in news production and consumption that may receive additional consideration.⁵⁷ Currently, Internet-based journalists apply to the gallery that best matches how they report the news and must meet similar employment and parent publication rules as traditional media journalists. Because websites can provide text, photographs, audio, video, or a combination of these formats, it may be more difficult to draw distinctions between media types for these outlets.⁵⁸ Publication can also occur immediately and may obscure differences between daily and periodical publications. The low cost to self-publish on the Internet could also present challenges to the gallery requirements that journalists must be primarily employed by a news outlet. Non-journalists may also be able to effectively report news from the Capitol with handheld Internet-connected devices, like smartphones, and the ubiquity of social media publishing and broadcasting applications. These considerations may be relevant for the congressional press galleries, or for broader chamber rules and policies regarding photography, broadcasting, or use of electronic devices.

Concluding Observations

Since the 1800s, a number of changes have occurred in how news is produced and distributed. The basic structure of the congressional press galleries, however, has remained fairly consistent. Credentialing requirements originated as a way to facilitate professional news reporting from Congress, preventing congressional staff from doubling as reporters and lobbyists from posing as reporters to gain access. Today, the accreditation process continues as a measure to provide access to Congress for credible journalists and news outlets.

The system of having an independent correspondents' committee, comprised of gallery members, as the gatekeepers for congressional press credentials for that gallery, generally addresses potential concerns that Congress might infringe upon the rights of a free press or only allow for favorable news coverage. Although the Speaker of the House and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration must approve any gallery rules, the substance of the rules often reflect measures initiated by the correspondents' committees and gallery members. Designated administrative staff in each gallery further help to insulate the press galleries from possible political pressure.

The level of administrative resources granted to the galleries has increased since their creation, but the number of credentialed correspondents has also continued to grow, particularly in the radio/TV galleries. This may be relevant to the consideration of what resources are allocated to the galleries, or how these resources are distributed across each chamber's galleries. Previously clear distinctions between media types and publication schedules, which form the basis of the current gallery divisions, may become increasingly blurred, and this may be relevant as Congress considers how to accommodate multimedia journalists and Internet-based news.

Accreditation

Congressional press accreditation for magazines, newsletters, non-daily newspapers, and on-line publications are handled through the Periodical Press Gallery. The Executive Committee of Correspondents decides which publications qualify for press credentials.

The application process can be lengthy with the potential for taking six months to a year to complete, and some applications have taken even longer. Approval is not guaranteed at the end of the process. Please see the rules and regulations to review the qualifications.

New credentials are issued for each session of Congress (annually) and a new application form must be submitted every Congress in order to continue membership in the Gallery.

Please note that old press credentials must be turned in to receive new credentials.

1. Administration of the press galleries shall be vested in a Standing Committee of Correspondents elected by accredited members of the Galleries.

The Committee shall consist of five persons elected to serve for terms of two years. Provided, however, that at the election in January 1951, the three candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall serve for two years and the remaining two for one year. Thereafter, three members shall be elected in odd-numbered years and two in even-numbered years. Elections shall be held in January. The Committee shall elect its own chairman and secretary. Vacancies on the Committee shall be filled by special election to be called by the Standing Committee.

2. Persons desiring admission to the press galleries of Congress shall make application in accordance with Rule VI of the House of Representatives, subject to the direction and control of the Speaker and Rule 33 of the Senate, which rules shall be interpreted and administered by the Standing Committee of Correspondents, subject to the review and an approval by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

3. The Standing Committee of Correspondents shall limit membership in the press galleries to bona fide correspondents of repute in their profession, under such rules as the Standing Committee of Correspondents shall prescribe.

4. An applicant for press credentials through the Daily Press Galleries must establish to the satisfaction of the Standing Committee of Correspondents that he or she is a full-time, paid correspondent who requires on-site access to congressional members and staff.

Correspondents must be employed by a news organization:

- (a) with General Publication periodicals mailing privileges under U.S. Postal Service rules, and which publishes daily; or
- (b) whose principal business is the daily dissemination of original news and opinion of interest to a broad segment of the public, and which has published continuously for 18 months.

The applicant must reside in the Washington, D.C. area, and must not be engaged in any lobbying or paid advocacy, advertising, publicity or promotion work for any individual, political party, corporation, organization, or agency of the U.S. Government, or in prosecuting any claim before Congress or any federal government department, and will not do so while a member of the Daily Press Galleries.

Applicants' publications must be editorially independent of any institution, foundation or interest group that lobbies the federal government, or that is not principally a general news organization. Failure to provide information to the Standing Committee for this determination, or misrepresenting information, can result in the denial or revocation of credentials.

5. Members of the families of correspondents are not entitled to the privileges of the Galleries.

6. The Standing Committee of Correspondents shall propose no changes in these rules except upon petition in writing signed by not less than 100 accredited members of the galleries.

The above rules have been approved by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

P R O C E E D I N G S

THE DEPUTY CLERK: Good morning, Your Honor. We're on the record in civil case 23-2321, Simon Ateba versus Jean-Pierre et al. Starting with plaintiff's counsel, may you please approach the podium and state your appearance for the record.

MR. SELL: Good morning, Your Honor. Eric Sell along with my co-counsel, Gary Lawkowski, appearing on behalf of the plaintiff.

THE COURT: Good morning.

MR. KNAPP: Good morning, Your Honor. Michael Knapp on behalf of defendants. With me at counsel table is Joseph Borson and Lesley Farby.

THE COURT: Good morning to you as well. Will only counsel who just did the introductions be making the arguments or is there any splitting of the arguments that's going to be made? First on behalf of the plaintiff.

You have to always use the microphone for the court reporter's convenience. Thank you.

MR. SELL: Your Honor, I will be handling the First Amendment arguments and my co-counsel will be handling the APA argument.

THE COURT: All right. And for the government?

MR. KNAPP: Your Honor, we'll also be splitting. I'll be handling the first claim, the unbridled discretion claim,

1 and then Mr. Borson will be handling the second and third
2 claims.

3 THE COURT: All right. We will hear first from the 4 plaintiff. It is the plaintiff's case, and there are 5 cross-motions for summary judgment. I'm anticipating
6 something in the neighborhood of 30 to 45 minutes total for 7 each side, so use your time accordingly and anticipate that I
8 have read all the papers, have thought about it, and will have 9 some questions along the way.

10 Mr. Sell.

11 MR. SELL: Thank you, Your Honor. May it please the 12 Court.

13 The current White House hard pass program is 14 unconstitutional. It relies on arbitrary, irrational, and 15 unreasonable criteria in regulating access to the White House
16 press area. Hard pass holders enjoy on-demand access to the 17 press area during business hours and need not wait for a 18 chaperone upon entering the White House grounds. Neither 19 privilege is available to a day pass holder.

20 This tiered credentialing scheme provides --

21 THE COURT: Is that the only difference between the day
22 pass and the hard pass, just that the person may have to wait
23 a little longer for the security clearance and for someone to 24 escort them? Is that it?

25 MR. SELL: No, Your Honor. They have to register ahead

1 of time for every single day that they wish to appear. They
2 can register for a week's worth on Sunday night if they wish
3 to. But the bottom line is they have to register for every 4 single day that they plan on going to the White House. So if 5 there is a spontaneous media event, World War III breaks out
6 and they didn't apply for a day pass the day before, they're 7 out of luck, they can't get there.

8 So this truly is a second-class status in terms of which 9 journalists have access to the White House briefing room.

10 THE COURT: Well, why should I be so concerned that 11 someone has decided not to bother applying for a pass the day
12 before? That's their choice.

13 MR. SELL: Your Honor, they shouldn't be burdened with 14 having to apply for a pass every single day. They should get 15 equal access --

16 THE COURT: You're burdened to have to apply for a hard
17 pass. There's burden involved to some extent all along.

18 MR. SELL: Sure.

19 THE COURT: Anybody, any correspondent even, cannot 20 just walk into the White House. There's some process, some 21 burden involved. Why is the burden for the hard pass in this 22 context so much greater?

23 MR. SELL: Mr. Ateba's simply asking for equal terms in 24 accessing the White House press area. And right now he is 25 effectively shut out of the White House program based off of

1 this arbitrary and irrational requirement that he first have 2 the stamp of approval --

3 THE COURT: Well, "effectively shut out" may be a
4 little bit of an advocate's overstatement, but I understand.
5 Some of the cases dealing with this subject matter --
6 Sherrill, Karem, to a lesser extent but still a similar 7 subject matter, my Getty Images case -- all deal with actual 8 denials of access.

9 This case does not deal with a denial of access. It's just 10 that the mode of access, or the means of access has changed
11 and become a little more burdensome. Does that make a 12 difference?

13 MR. SELL: Respectfully, Your Honor, I think that is 14 factually incorrect. Karem, if you look at the district court
15 opinion, the court of appeals opinion, the complaint and the 16 briefing, it appears that it was all about denial of access to 17 the hard pass program specifically, not denial of access to 18 the day pass program. So it appears that Mr. Karem still had 19 access to the day pass --

20 THE COURT: Okay. I see your point there in terms of 21 denial of access to the hard pass program.

22 MR. SELL: Yes. Yes. The D.C. Circuit in its analysis
23 of what Mr. Karem was denied was focused specifically on his 24 denial of access to the hard pass. And there was no
25 indication that he couldn't access the day pass program and

1 still access the briefing area.

2 So this entire dispute that Mr. Karem was involved in was 3 about his exclusion from the hard pass specifically, which is 4 the expedited access that Mr. Ateba is entitled to because 5 every other journalist is entitled to it, because the White
6 House has chosen to open up this government property to the 7 press. Doesn't have to do that.

8 THE COURT: Is there a fundamental difference in the 9 analysis between a context where there's an outright denial of 10 access and just access is made much more burdensome? Or is 11 the analysis the same in both situations?

12 MR. SELL: I believe the analysis would be the same,
13 Your Honor. I think that if you're creating a tiered
14 credentialing scheme and you're providing preferential access
15 for some, the way in which you categorize who gets that 16 preferential access has to meet constitutional scrutiny.

17 It has to satisfy constitutional scrutiny. You can't 18 create this arbitrary classification where the only 19 individuals who are allowed this expedited access are those 20 who satisfy or get the stamp of approval from the congressional 21 press galleries. They're completely immune from suit under 22 the Consumers Union case.

23 So what the White House has done here is outsource their 24 filtering mechanism to a body that is completely immune from 25 suit under D.C. Circuit precedent. They can do whatever they

1 want. So they may say that they've adopted these objective
2 standards to make sure that all the journalists are bona fide,
3 but there is no judicial review of their decisions.

4 You could appeal their decisions to the Speaker of the 5 House and the Senate Rules Committee, but there's no judicial 6 review beyond that. And, frankly, as a matter of practice,
7 the Speaker of the House and Senate Rules Committee is not 8 reviewing the credentialing decisions of the congressional 9 press galleries. So it's a black box. There is no way to 10 review what they're deciding. And the White House has now
11 incorporated that credentialing process into its own.

12 THE COURT: "Now" is not totally accurate.

13 MR. SELL: Fair enough.

14 THE COURT: That's been the case since the Gerald
15 Ford administration.

16 MR. SELL: Fair enough, Your Honor.

17 THE COURT: Except for a brief less than two-year
18 period.

19 MR. SELL: Yes, Your Honor. And I think if you look at 20 the history of this, when this all came about, it was I
21 believe after the Consumers Union case. Once the D.C. Circuit
22 said the congressional press galleries are immune from suit,
23 that's when the White House, it appears, has incorporated that 24 criterion into its own hard pass program.

25 THE COURT: The other two branches, the legislative

1 branch and the judicial branch at the Supreme Court, have
2 these press galleries. The White House doesn't have that
3 structure with a complicated press gallery and admission to it
4 in the same way. Why is it unreasonable -- and I use that 5 word intentionally -- why is it unreasonable for the White
6 House to rely on that process that exists in the legislative 7 branch?

8 MR. SELL: It's unreasonable because the congressional 9 press galleries can do whatever they want. It's unreasonable
10 because there is absolutely no way for someone like Mr. Ateba
11 to --

12 THE COURT: So if there were judicial review of 13 decisions by either the House or the Senate with respect to 14 admission to their press galleries, then you wouldn't have a 15 case.

16 MR. SELL: No, Your Honor. I think that gets us
17 closer.

18 THE COURT: But that's why you said it was 19 unreasonable. Because of the lack of judicial review.

20 MR. SELL: I have a second point, Your Honor. In 21 addition to the lack of judicial review, it also doesn't make 22 any sense to send someone to Congress to get press credentials
23 before getting press credentials at the White House. Why
24 should Mr. Ateba, who wants to cover the White House full 25 time -- doesn't necessarily want to cover Congress, he wants

1 to spend his time going to the White House --

2 COURT REPORTER: You need to slow down.

3 MR. SELL: Sorry. -- wants to go to the White House
4 to --

5 THE COURT: He doesn't have to cover Congress in order
6 to get into the congressional press galleries.

7 MR. SELL: No, Your Honor.

8 THE COURT: That's not a standard. That's not part of 9 their standard.

10 MR. SELL: It just doesn't make any sense to create
11 this additional hurdle when the only purpose of it is to weed
12 out the riffraff from the hard pass program. I mean, it
13 appears to be. The government has provided no explanation for 14 why this additional requirement serves any purpose for, you
15 know, capacity restrictions or making sure the White House
16 press area is used for its intended purpose. Why should 17 someone have to go to Congress, jump through all these 18 additional hoops, pay a small fee, to cover the White House?

19 It just is irrational and doesn't make any sense. Just 20 because they've done it for 50 years? That's not a good 21 enough reason to keep doing it. Journalists are excluded from 22 the hard pass program. Bona fide correspondents like 23 Mr. Ateba are excluded from the hard pass program simply 24 because they haven't yet received the stamp of approval from 25 the congressional press galleries. That doesn't make any

1 sense at all.

2 THE COURT: Are you aware -- there's nothing in the 3 record to say that journalists are excluded. Are you aware of 4 any other journalist that is of the view that she or he has 5 been excluded improperly from the hard pass program because of 6 an inability to get acceptance in the congressional press
7 galleries or the Supreme Court press galleries?

8 MR. SELL: Your Honor, in the verified complaint that 9 we originally filed, the only complaint so far in this case,
10 we outlined that there were 440 approximately other 11 journalists who had their hard pass canceled, and some of 12 those, a subset of those, were actively using their hard
13 passes in covering --

14 THE COURT: But are you aware that any of them are of 15 the view that they've been improperly excluded by that?

16 MR. SELL: I don't believe that's in the record.

17 THE COURT: You're just making that assumption.

18 MR. SELL: I don't believe --

19 THE COURT: And I understand there's some logic to the 20 assumption, but it is just an assumption.

21 MR. SELL: Fair enough, Your Honor. Yes. But I think 22 that is a fair assumption, and if we have the opportunity to 23 file an amended pleading at some point in this case, if it's 24 necessary we can certainly --

25 THE COURT: Let's return to the First Amendment here.

1 Your argument is that the First Amendment protects a right of 2 access to the White House press area because that access will
3 lead to better news gathering and reporting. What case do you
4 rely on for that?

5 MR. SELL: Sherrill, I think, is the clearest case on 6 point.

7 THE COURT: So to the extent that you rely on Sherrill,
8 how do you reconcile it with Houchins v. KQED and Flynt v.
9 Rumsfeld in the D.C. Circuit -- the first case being in the 10 Supreme Court -- which basically hold that reporters have no
11 special rights of access to public facilities? How do you
12 reconcile those later cases with the earlier Sherrill case?
13 Why is Sherrill still good law?

14 MR. SELL: Your Honor, those cases are not inconsistent
15 with Sherrill. The government property at issue in the Flynt
16 case, for example, was the theater of war. Larry Flynt wanted
17 access to the U.S. troops and the government was not providing 18 any media access to the United States military troops
19 overseas.

20 Here they have opened up access to some reporters. We're 21 not arguing that there's a First Amendment right to access the 22 White House in general; we're saying there's a First Amendment
23 right to equal access to the press area once the government
24 has voluntarily opened it up. So that's the question here.
25 It's not whether, you know, Mr. Ateba and any other journalist

1 can force the government to open up the White House to the 2 press. The White House has already chosen to do that.

3 THE COURT: You think that observation in the KQED case
4 is also distinguishable because of the context in that case?

5 MR. SELL: Your Honor, if I recall that case correctly,
6 that was also a case that they were asking for access to 7 government property that wasn't already opened to the public
8 or to the press. So I do think there is a different line of 9 cases where you talk about, you know, what the Constitution
10 requires the government to open up, what government property
11 does the --

12 THE COURT: So will you agree that based on those 13 cases, reporters have no special right of access to public
14 facilities?

15 MR. SELL: Public facilities, Your Honor, that the 16 government has not opened up to the press, yes. I would agree 17 with that.

18 THE COURT: The distinction here is that the press area
19 has been opened up to the press or certain members of the 20 press.

21 MR. SELL: Yes, Your Honor. Yes. And when the 22 government has chosen to do that, it can certainly regulate 23 access to that property. We're not objecting to that. It 24 just has to do so in a fair and nonarbitrary manner and the 25 government, the White House is not doing that here.

1 THE COURT: So there's a lot of ink that's been spilled
2 over whether it's a Sherrill analysis or a forum analysis, and 3 if it's a forum analysis, is it a nonpublic forum versus a
4 limited public forum.

5 What I want to hear from you is what's the standard that is 6 to be applied by the Court in any of those settings, either
7 under Sherrill or under either of the two prongs of the forum
8 analysis, does it all boil down to a reasonableness standard?

9 MR. SELL: No. No, Your Honor, it has --

10 THE COURT: Why not?

11 MR. SELL: It has to be viewpoint neutral. That's 12 always a requirement --

13 THE COURT: That's part of the reasonableness standard.

14 MR. SELL: Fair enough. Fair enough. The reason the 15 viewpoint neutrality component of that isn't met here --

16 THE COURT: And if it has to be viewpoint neutral,
17 what's the evidence that there's any viewpoint discrimination
18 here? What's the evidence of that?

19 MR. SELL: A credentialing scheme that is based on 20 unbridled discretion is inherently viewpoint discriminatory,
21 Your Honor, because there's no way to determine whether the 22 government is engaging in viewpoint discrimination or not, so 23 the courts have --

24 THE COURT: So your view then is that it's because of 25 the unbridled discretion and the possibility of viewpoint

1 discrimination, not that there has been any viewpoint
2 discrimination.

3 MR. SELL: On our facial challenge yes, Your Honor. It
4 is the unbridled discretion itself that is the failure of the 5 viewpoint neutrality requirement.

6 THE COURT: All right. Then we have to get to what I
7 think is one of the major issues in the case, and that is does
8 it matter that the decisionmaker here is not the White House?

9 MR. SELL: No.

10 THE COURT: So the unbridled discretion cases say that 11 the purpose of the doctrine as you've just identified it is to 12 prevent -- I think most of them talk about either content or 13 viewpoint discrimination -- by the decisionmaker, and 14 self-censorship by the speaker in order to please the 15 decisionmaker. In all those cases the defendant is the 16 decisionmaker. I think in all of them.

17 So does it affect how we apply the unbridled discretion
18 doctrine if the decisionmaker is not the defendant? Here we 19 have the press gallery, not the White House, deciding whether 20 Mr. Ateba can get the credential. Your fear isn't viewpoint
21 discrimination by the press gallery. Your fear is viewpoint
22 discrimination by the White House. That's what your fear is.

23 So isn't that fear that the White House will engage in 24 content or viewpoint discrimination, not the press gallery,
25 isn't that something that makes this case fundamentally

1 different, because of the identity of the decisionmaker? Why
2 are we concerned about unbridled discretion by the press
3 gallery? That's not where your fear lies. Your fear lies
4 with what the White House will do.

5 MR. SELL: Your Honor, we disagree with that. Our fear
6 is absolutely that the congressional press galleries will 7 discriminate --

8 THE COURT: What's the basis for a fear that the press
9 galleries will discriminate on the basis of viewpoint? What's 10 the basis for that fear?

11 MR. SELL: That they don't have any standards, Your 12 Honor. That they don't have any standards to constrain their 13 discretion determining whether Mr. Ateba is worthy enough to 14 obtain a hard pass.

15 And I also quibble with the Court's point that the cases
16 involving unbridled discretion and cases like the unbridled
17 discretion cases only involve challenges to the defendant
18 decisionmaker. If you look at Mansky, the Supreme Court case
19 that addressed the Minnesota statute involving access to the 20 polling places with political messages, those decisions, the 21 decisionmaker in those cases were thousands of independent
22 election judges across the state of Minnesota who were making 23 the decisions. And the concern was that they would engage in 24 viewpoint discrimination. The defendant in that case was the 25 Minnesota state board of elections administrator.

1 So it isn't always that the defendant named in the lawsuit
2 needs to be the decisionmaker in the unbridled discretion
3 cases.

4 THE COURT: There's a closer connection between those
5 two than there is between the press galleries and the White
6 House in terms of controlling what's happening.

7 MR. SELL: Fair enough, Your Honor, but I still don't 8 think the danger of viewpoint discrimination is eliminated
9 when you outsource the decision to a third party in regulating
10 access to your own government property as a government entity.
11 So the White House can outsource this to the National Press
12 Club --

13 THE COURT: What possible motivation would the press
14 galleries have for viewpoint discrimination against Mr. Ateba?
15 Or anyone else? What possible motivation would they have?

16 MR. SELL: Your Honor, the executive committees of the 17 press gallery are Mr. Ateba's competition.

18 THE COURT: That's not viewpoint discrimination.
19 That's an economic discrimination; it is not viewpoint
20 discrimination.

21 MR. SELL: Your Honor, but I do believe that it does
22 create a context in which viewpoint discrimination is fostered
23 and is likely, especially when there is no standard --

24 THE COURT: Why? Why do you think that because there's 25 competition there's going to be viewpoint discrimination?

1 MR. SELL: Your Honor, it's not just the competition,
2 it's that these journalists all work for established outlets
3 in the D.C. area that they themselves deem reputable and 4 important and quality news outlets, and they look down on 5 people who maybe don't have that same level of history and 6 credential and experience --

7 THE COURT: Again, that's not really viewpoint
8 discrimination.

9 MR. SELL: Your Honor, it can lead to --

10 THE COURT: They look down on them because they're not 11 part of the institutional team, but not because they're 12 reporting one way or another on issues.

13 MR. SELL: I don't think that's necessarily true, Your 14 Honor. I think the congressional --

15 THE COURT: I mean, the institutional members of the 16 press gallery include Fox News, The Washington Post, New York
17 Times, The Wall Street Journal, et cetera. They're not of one 18 viewpoint. There's no reason to believe that those 19 institutional members -- and I'll grant that they are 20 institutional members of the media -- will have a skew on 21 viewpoint, unless you're of the view -- maybe this is an 22 argument that you want to make -- that the media is biased
23 overall in one direction and that Mr. Ateba is in the other 24 direction. I don't think that's something that you want to 25 argue or could argue.

1 MR. SELL: No, Your Honor. That's not the basis of our 2 argument. Our argument is that there is no check on whether
3 the executive committees are engaging in viewpoint
4 discrimination. That's the problem. So they can if they 5 choose to, and that's the problem.

6 THE COURT: So if you accept for a moment that your 7 fear is more about the White House engaging in viewpoint
8 discrimination than it is in the press galleries engaging in 9 viewpoint discrimination, wouldn't it make sense to place the 10 decision-making discretion in an outside professional group
11 like the press galleries, because that's a way to actually 12 reduce the discretion of the White House and the possibility
13 that the White House will engage in viewpoint discrimination?
14 Doesn't that seem to be something that reduces the risk of 15 viewpoint discrimination by the White House, which is, it
16 seems to me, what your real fear is, and doesn't that 17 really -- and that's what the unbridled discretion doctrine is 18 supposed to address.

19 It seems to me that -- it strikes one as being somewhat 20 reasonable to look to that outside entity because that 21 actually reduces the possibility of White House
22 discrimination.

23 MR. SELL: A couple points, Your Honor. That may make 24 sense if the standards that the third party are using are 25 actually objective and measurable and there is some process

1 for reviewing those outside credentialing decisions. Some 2 process -- when you're talking about exercising constitutional
3 rights being dependent on a third party credentialing agency,
4 there needs to be some meaningful level of review of that 5 third party credentialing decision. And right now there is 6 not any review of that decision. Unless the Court can view
7 the fact that the White House is incorporated into its own
8 process, and the fact that the White House is subject to suit, 9 that would be one way to review the third party decision, but 10 it would be doing so by attributing it to the White House and 11 the process that that third party is using and attributing
12 that to the White House, and allowing people like Mr. Ateba to 13 sue the White House for the third party credentialing
14 decisions. That would be more acceptable because then at 15 least there is some kind of third party check on that process
16 to determine whether it's acceptable or not.

17 I don't think that it makes sense entirely to outsource to 18 a third party because that would allow, you know, the 19 Federalist Society to serve, if the White House chose to, to 20 serve as the credentialing body for the White House press
21 area. That doesn't make any sense. The Federalist Society
22 may uphold --

23 THE COURT: Certain White Houses have outsourced to the 24 Federalist Society quite a bit.

25 MR. SELL: Not for access to the press area, Your

1 Honor, and that's the problem here. This is exercising of a
2 fundamental First Amendment right, equal access to a
3 designated press area, but dependent on outsourcing to a third
4 party that is completely immune from judicial review, doesn't 5 have any standards really for Mr. Ateba to know whether he's 6 reputable or not or of repute or not, and it's really just a
7 black box. And he has to subject himself to it. And either
8 he gets approved or he doesn't, and there's no way for him to 9 appeal that decision.

10 So his access to the White House press area is totally up
11 to the whim of the executive committees of the press
12 galleries.

13 THE COURT: We've talked a lot about viewpoint
14 discrimination, and I want to talk about the viewpoint
15 discrimination claim. But is that you or is that your --

16 MR. SELL: That would be me, Your Honor.

17 THE COURT: Okay. So we'll get to that in a minute.
18 But in terms of the standard, not the hard pass policy
19 standards but the standard in the press gallery, a large part
20 of your case is the vagueness or lack of objective standards
21 from this reputable correspondent language. The language is 22 "bona fide resident correspondent of reputable standing,
23 giving their chief attention to the gathering and reporting of 24 news."

25 So your view is that that's not sufficiently -- it's not

1 reasonable because it's not sufficiently objective and 2 manageable, in part.

3 MR. SELL: Yes, Your Honor. And we also believe that 4 that violates the unbridled discretion doctrine which again we 5 assert is per se --

6 THE COURT: I know. We're in the middle of the 7 unbridled discretion doctrine even with this. So why do you
8 view that as standing alone? If you look at the entirety of 9 the language in the press gallery standards, there's other
10 things there. There are other sentences that add a little bit
11 to that in terms of who you're employed by, what you are not 12 engaged in. There's a lot there that sort of supplements or 13 fleshes out a little bit what a reputable correspondent is.
14 Why don't I have to look at that entire package rather than 15 just those isolated words?

16 MR. SELL: Your Honor, you should look at the entire 17 package, and I encourage the Court to notice that if an 18 applicant checks off every single box but isn't deemed of 19 repute by the congressional press galleries, they're out of 20 luck. What does "of repute" mean? There's no way to know 21 that. It's really up to these five individuals who work for 22 the daily press gallery to determine whether Mr. Ateba is of 23 repute or not. We don't even know what that means. It's 24 whatever these five individuals decide it means.

25 And that is entirely subjective. They're in an industry,

1 again, like I said, they're Mr. Ateba's competition, and I
2 understand that Your Honor thinks that that only is an
3 economic injury but I think that certainly lends itself to 4 viewpoint discrimination if they don't think that Mr. Ateba
5 and his publication is providing the correct news or the 6 correct angle on the news, they have the 100 percent power to 7 exclude him from the hard pass program if they choose to. And 8 there's absolutely no way to prevent that. There's no check
9 at all.

10 THE COURT: All right. What else do you want to say
11 before we take a minute on viewpoint discrimination?

12 MR. SELL: Your Honor, I think we've covered just about 13 everything. And again, just think of the ramifications of 14 ruling in the government's favor on this facial challenge and 15 what the government could do to insulate itself in its 16 credentialing decisions if this process were allowed to stand.

17 THE COURT: So to drive home my point that your fear is 18 more about viewpoint discrimination by the White House, you
19 have a claim --

20 MR. SELL: Yes.

21 THE COURT: -- that is actually --

22 MR. SELL: Yes, Your Honor.

23 THE COURT: -- premised on viewpoint discrimination by 24 the White House. So if I find that the hard pass policy
25 targeted Mr. Ateba based on his identity, on who he is, not

1 because of his viewpoint, is that nonetheless viewpoint
2 discrimination?

3 MR. SELL: Yes, Your Honor. I believe it is --

4 THE COURT: Why?

5 MR. SELL: Viewpoint discrimination, Justice Scalia
6 discussed this -- both the majority opinion in Citizens United
7 and Justice Scalia's concurrence in Citizens United discussed,
8 you know, this idea of identity-based viewpoint discrimination
9 based off of who a person is, and also attempts to distinguish
10 between the institutional press and everyone else.

11 And what happened here was Mr. Ateba had been covering the 12 White House for several years, had been routinely trying to 13 obtain answers from the White House, sending questions, asking
14 questions. He wouldn't get a response. He started raising
15 his voice in the briefing room, and instead of enforcing a 16 conduct policy to address that conduct, the White House just 17 changed the rules of the game altogether to bar him from the 18 hard pass program.

19 THE COURT: Well, there's a factual issue here as to 20 whether that's what the hard pass policy was directed at, as 21 opposed to the conduct policy put into place at the same time, 22 which sounds much more like what you're describing.

23 MR. SELL: Your Honor, it's interesting. The White 24 House says they canceled or changed the hard pass program to 25 get rid of all or cancel all the hard passes that weren't in

1 use. Well, Mr. Ateba's hard pass was in use. And why would 2 you add in this additional criterion for the congressional 3 press galleries if your only purpose for changing the hard
4 pass program is to cancel the old ones? It smells fishy. And 5 it certainly, when you look at the context and the timeline of 6 events, the media attention of Mr. Ateba's interactions with 7 the press secretary in the briefing room --

8 THE COURT: But again, that sounds more like identity
9 focus rather than viewpoint focus. And the Supreme Court,
10 although you've mentioned some Supreme Court cases, there are 11 other Supreme Court cases like Reed v. Town of Gilbert that 12 caution that if it is identity focus, then you really have to 13 look at this to see if it involves content or viewpoint
14 discrimination as well, that identity focus does not correlate
15 with viewpoint or content discrimination; you've got to find 16 that as well in order to subject it to really close scrutiny.

17 MR. SELL: Your Honor, I think it's reasonable to infer 18 from our complaint and the facts that we've laid out in the 19 complaint that that additional content or viewpoint
20 discrimination is plausible. And we're not moving for summary
21 judgment on this viewpoint discrimination claim.

22 THE COURT: I understand that.

23 MR. SELL: We have satisfied the plausibility
24 requirement here. We think that we can obtain everything we 25 need to --

1 THE COURT: So what is it that you think satisfies the 2 plausibility requirements for dismissal or not dismissal with 3 respect to your viewpoint discrimination claim? What facts
4 or -- well, what facts do you point me to?

5 MR. SELL: Your Honor, in the complaint we discuss the 6 specific interactions between Mr. Ateba and the press
7 secretary, including the Ted Lasso incident that happened in 8 March. His objection was that the press secretary was using 9 that time for some, you know, staged event to draw attention
10 to the president's initiative instead of allowing reporters an 11 opportunity to ask questions, because that's what these press
12 briefings are designed for.

13 So his objections and the retaliation from the White House
14 against Mr. Ateba because he raised these objections, it's 15 reasonable to infer that the change in the White House was to 16 exclude him from the hard pass program because he raised these 17 objections.

18 THE COURT: If I'm going to put those facts in one
19 bucket or another, and the two buckets are viewpoint based or 20 identity based, it seems to me they fall into the identity
21 based much more readily. You say it's logical to infer, but 22 that sounds like it's identity based rather than -- or 23 identity based alone, and not viewpoint based.

24 MR. SELL: Your Honor, this could have all been 25 resolved if the defendants had submitted some evidence, some

1 declaration or affidavit --

2 THE COURT: That may be a failing on their part. But 3 right now I'm talking about the possible failings on your 4 part.

5 MR. SELL: Sure. Fair enough. Fair enough.

6 Your Honor, I would say that this isn't that -- the story
7 that we presented in the complaint here and the government's 8 failure to rebut that by saying it wasn't because of 9 Mr. Ateba's viewpoint, the questions he was asking, his 10 concerns over how the White House press secretary is running
11 the briefing room, they all had the opportunity to say that 12 wasn't the reason they changed the hard pass program. And 13 they didn't do that.

14 And, again, this is plausibility that we're trying to get 15 to at this stage in the litigation on this claim, and we 16 satisfied that bar, very certain of that, given the extensive
17 news coverage focused on all of this that pointed to Mr. Ateba
18 as the reason, the impetus for changing the hard pass program.
19 It was all focused on him.

20 THE COURT: But would you agree that on this
21 plausibility point with respect to viewpoint discrimination,
22 that issue has been sufficiently briefed through the 23 combination of the summary judgment papers and the preliminary 24 injunction papers?

25 MR. SELL: It's been sufficiently briefed to deny their

1 motion, Your Honor, but if the Court would like additional 2 briefing on any specific question, we'd be happy to provide 3 that.

4 THE COURT: I understand that. Thank you.

5 All right. I think at this point you should save any time
6 that I'm going to give you for rebuttal, but I will hear now
7 from your colleague on the APA claim.

8 MR. LAWKOWSKI: Thank you, Your Honor, and may it
9 please the Court.

10 THE COURT: And is it Mr. Lawkowski?

11 MR. LAWKOWSKI: Yes, sir.

12 THE COURT: All right.

13 MR. LAWKOWSKI: Up through July of 2023, Mr. Ateba had 14 a hard pass. As of August he no longer did that worked. The 15 U.S. Secret Service is a federal agency. It issues hard 16 passes; it cancels hard passes. It canceled Mr. Ateba's hard
17 pass. This court has previously recognized --

18 THE COURT: The "it" you're referring to is who?

19 MR. LAWKOWSKI: The U.S. Secret Service, and the hard
20 pass. I'm not sure which part of that sentence.

21 The government has not provided any explanation for the 22 cancelation of Mr. Ateba's hard pass. It's referred to this
23 general White House policy, however, that appears to have no
24 applicability to Mr. Ateba when you get down to the reasons
25 for it.

1 First, the policy was issued without any explanation for
2 why it was issued. Their ex post facto explanations have no
3 relation to Mr. Ateba. Cleaning up kind of the use of hard
4 passes for people who aren't using them does not apply to him
5 because he used them frequently. And the government has 6 effectively conceded through several rounds of briefing where 7 they have yet to address any nonarbitrary and capricious
8 reason for canceling Mr. Ateba's hard pass.

9 THE COURT: So who would provide the reasoned
10 explanation that you think is lacking as to the cancelation of 11 the hard pass, or as to the resumption of the hard pass policy
12 that relies on the press galleries? Who would provide that 13 explanation?

14 MR. LAWKOWSKI: The Secret Service.

15 THE COURT: Why do you say the Secret Service would?
16 The Secret Service didn't decide to put that into place and 17 the Secret Service didn't decide whether to rely on the press
18 galleries. The White House did.

19 MR. LAWKOWSKI: Whether the Secret Service is the 20 ultimate decisionmaker, they're the ones implementing the 21 decision, and in prior cases the court has recognized that the 22 APA applies to --

23 THE COURT: I'll grant you that they implement it. I
24 think the question then becomes do they implement it in a
25 ministerial fashion or something more? And would you concede

1 that with respect to providing the reasoned explanation, if 2 further reasoned explanation is required, that would come from 3 the White House?

4 MR. LAWKOWSKI: I think it would depend on the reason.
5 If it was a security based reason, that would clearly come
6 from the Secret Service.

7 THE COURT: But that's not what the hard pass is based 8 on. No one has said that.

9 MR. LAWKOWSKI: In this case, no, but presumably if it
10 were to apply more broadly, you could add that as a possible
11 explanation.

12 THE COURT: So let me look at it from another
13 direction. If I conclude that the standard in the hard pass
14 policy, whether it's focused on the actual standards there or 15 the standards as adopted in the press gallery's standards, if 16 I conclude that the standard is not reasonable as written, it
17 doesn't satisfy whatever the APA or First Amendment
18 requirements may be, on your APA claim, to whom would I remand 19 the case, which is the typical APA relief, in order to revise 20 that standard?

21 MR. LAWKOWSKI: Well, so to be clear, you would not
22 have to invalidate the policy in order to reinstate
23 Mr. Ateba's hard pass, because it's an as-applied challenge
24 with respect to the cancelation of his pass. So it would be 25 remanded to the Secret Service to undo the cancelation or

1 provide a reasoned explanation for it.

2 THE COURT: But if a reasoned explanation is required,
3 if that's the APA determination that I make, and it's lacking,
4 and I make the determination consistent with most APA law,
5 that a remand to the agency is the appropriate thing, who do I
6 remand it to?

7 MR. LAWKOWSKI: The U.S. Secret Service.

8 THE COURT: And the Secret Service would provide that 9 reasoned explanation?

10 MR. LAWKOWSKI: They would provide it. I presume they 11 would consult with the White House in drafting it, as happens
12 with many policies. Presumably the White House would almost 13 certainly write it and give it to the Secret Service who would 14 then issue it, but that is consistent with --

15 THE COURT: Other than the fact that you'd like them to 16 provide it because it means that you have an APA cause of 17 action against them, why do you think the Secret Service would 18 be the ones that would provide it, as opposed to what seems 19 logical, which is the White House would be providing it?

20 MR. LAWKOWSKI: Because the Secret Service is the 21 implementing agency. They're the one who's ultimately taking 22 the action, so they are the ones who are responsible for that 23 action.

24 THE COURT: Okay. What else?

25 MR. LAWKOWSKI: I mean, I think that's the crux of this

1 issue is he had a pass, it had no expiration date, it was 2 canceled, there's been no not arbitrary and capricious reason
3 given for that cancelation.

4 I think it's worth noting that in the number of cases that 5 deal with kind of presidential discretion and agencies and 6 trying to -- drawing that line, they all refer to the specific 7 kind of Article II authorities and the things that -- and the 8 constitutional values that are at play there. This isn't a 9 case that implicates those. This isn't a foreign affairs
10 case. This isn't a case that's going to get into the 11 confidential communications of the president like, say,
12 Judicial Watch was. This isn't an Antiquities Act case where 13 there's a clear statutory delegation of authority to the 14 president --

15 THE COURT: I understand that. But most of those cases
16 that you're referring to -- and there are a lot of cases in 17 which there's some kind of presidential or White House
18 directive or executive order or what have you that then is 19 followed by, for example, a regulation or something that is 20 put in place by a specific agency.

21 In those cases, as far as I can tell, it's almost always 22 the case that that agency is exercising its authority and its 23 discretion in deciding what to promulgate. That's not really 24 what we have here. All the Secret Service did,
25 notwithstanding the fact that they do have some security

1 authority that could have been exercised in a different case,
2 but here all the Secret Service did really was much more of a
3 ministerial task of effectuating the White House policy that 4 involved the White House's discretion and judgment.

5 MR. LAWKOWSKI: I disagree that the Secret Service
6 isn't exercising its own authority. The entire hard pass
7 program is part of the Secret Service's authority to protect 8 the president. Presumably the president could have a
9 situation where he just says I want to go meet with this 10 person, you know, whatever the Secret Service says, I'm going 11 to go do it. So this is all part of the Secret Service's 12 authority to protect the president.

13 THE COURT: If a correspondent does not satisfy the 14 hard pass policy created by the White House, perhaps because 15 of a failure to be able to get a press gallery authorization, 16 does the Secret Service in your view have discretion to 17 nonetheless admit that correspondent to the White House?

18 MR. LAWKOWSKI: I think they could, yes. I think
19 that --

20 THE COURT: You think they could?

21 MR. LAWKOWSKI: Yeah, I think they would almost 22 certainly get yelled at by the White House, but...

23 THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

24 Mr. Knapp.

25 MR. KNAPP: Good morning, Your Honor.

1 THE COURT: Good morning.

2 MR. KNAPP: As I mentioned before, I'll be addressing
3 the first claim and my colleague will be addressing the 4 viewpoint -- the actual viewpoint discrimination claim and the 5 APA claim.

6 I want to emphasize at the outset the unique purpose that 7 the White House serves as both the president's --

8 THE COURT: You need to speak up a little bit. Your 9 voice is trailing. Maybe get the microphone closer to you.

10 MR. KNAPP: I'm sorry. Does that work better?

11 I want to emphasize at the outset the unique function that 12 the White House serves as both the president's residence and 13 as the central offices for him and his closest staff. It is 14 no surprise I think to anyone that access is closely
15 regulated, and that includes access to the press briefings.

16 As you are well aware, there are two means of accessing the 17 press briefings. One is the hard pass we've been discussing,
18 and the other is the day pass. The White House revised its 19 policy this past spring to change the eligibility criteria for 20 a hard pass, but even in doing so, it emphasized that those 21 who could not obtain a hard pass could still access the press
22 briefings through the day pass system, as Mr. Ateba has 23 continued to do.

24 THE COURT: Let me jump into this void and talk about 25 the burdens a little bit. So you waited in line this morning

1 to go through security to get in here, right?

2 MR. KNAPP: Do you know that I did not, because I, as a
3 Department of Justice attorney, I have a badge that lets me
4 get through.

5 THE COURT: That made it so you could get through 6 faster.

7 MR. KNAPP: In this case, no, because I arrived very 8 early and there was no one else. But yes, Your Honor, it does 9 make it so I can get through faster.

10 THE COURT: But if instead of badging in, whether 11 through your Department of Justice pass or a judiciary
12 employee pass or a press pass, you have to instead go through 13 the longer line for security, wouldn't that be some burden on 14 your access to the building?

15 MR. KNAPP: Absolutely, Your Honor. That would be an 16 inconvenience.

17 THE COURT: And isn't that true for Mr. Ateba as well 18 for the day pass, as opposed to the hard pass, that there is 19 some burden just from having to go through that additional 20 security check?

21 MR. KNAPP: Yes, Your Honor. Although you'll hear me
22 continue to refer to it as an inconvenience, because the cases
23 distinguish between the two.

24 First of all, with regard to the hard pass and the day
25 pass, the actual security system gone through is essentially

1 identical. I believe Mr. Fletcher's declaration says it may
2 add up to two minutes. The primary difference, as you heard
3 earlier, is that you -- for a hard pass, you have to apply for 4 a hard pass, you apply one time. You have to also apply to 5 get this congressional credential or Supreme Court credential,
6 which is its own burden.

7 And then for the day pass, it's a brief online form. You
8 click the link, you fill in name and identifying number and 9 date of birth, so that the Secret Service can perform the 10 security check. And so -- and that is something as you heard 11 that you would have to do for each day you wish to access the 12 White House.

13 But the essential point is that as a matter of 14 constitutional law those kinds of inconveniences do not create
15 a First Amendment violation. The -- I think the Fourth
16 Circuit's decision in Wicomico County is instructive on this.
17 That was one where the -- it was a paralegal who had I guess
18 special access to the prison, to interview prisoners and 19 employees, and that special access was rescinded. And the 20 Fourth Circuit explained, like, well, yes, of course that did
21 inconvenience her, but that's constitutionally de minimis.

22 THE COURT: And so that's part of your argument that 23 there is not a First Amendment injury here.

24 MR. KNAPP: Yes, Your Honor. Absolutely.

25 THE COURT: And I guess I don't understand that as

1 being a standing argument. It's not a standing argument.

2 MR. KNAPP: No, Your Honor.

3 THE COURT: You would concede that Mr. Ateba has 4 standing to bring the claims he's brought.

5 MR. KNAPP: Yes, Your Honor. I mean --

6 THE COURT: It's more the lack of a constitutional
7 cause of action?

8 MR. KNAPP: Yes, Your Honor. I think that's correct.

9 THE COURT: All right. So let me give you a 10 hypothetical. I'm going to change one thing from the facts of 11 this case. In the press gallery standard, instead of just the 12 language with respect to being a reputable correspondent, it
13 says a correspondent employed by an employer that agrees with 14 the positions of the Democratic Party. And Mr. Ateba doesn't,
15 and so he can't satisfy that. Or another correspondent
16 doesn't and so can't satisfy that. Do they have a First 17 Amendment claim they can bring?

18 MR. KNAPP: So first of all, I think no, because the 19 day pass system would remain in place and so he would still 20 have no First Amendment injury. You recall the claim here is 21 access to the White House. This is not a regulation that 22 restricts his speech or his publication. So there's a long
23 line of Supreme Court cases --

24 THE COURT: So no matter what the standard is and no
25 matter how the standard is framed in terms of First Amendment

1 interests, there simply is no First Amendment right at issue
2 with respect to access to the White House press area.

3 MR. KNAPP: With respect to hard pass access to the 4 White House press areas. If that were the only means of 5 accessing the White House, then I think what you would say is 6 that that would be unreasonable to use that standard under the 7 First Amendment. Because if it is the only means of access,
8 then it becomes a very different question. And in fact, if 9 you were denied access --

10 THE COURT: So it's the combination of the fact that 11 it's the White House press area and that access is not 12 prohibited -- it is just limited -- that makes it so there's 13 no First Amendment claim?

14 MR. KNAPP: I don't think it actually turns on the 15 specific fact that it's the White House. What it turns on is 16 that he can still access the area that he seeks to access.
17 That's what prevents him from having a First Amendment --

18 THE COURT: So the First Amendment does not protect 19 against burdening access. It only protects against 20 prohibiting access.

21 MR. KNAPP: Yes, Your Honor. I think that's correct.

22 THE COURT: What case stands for that proposition?

23 MR. KNAPP: I think if you look at -- I mean, if you
24 look at Branzburg, which obviously is outside of the access
25 context, but it talks about burdens on news gathering. It

1 says that those are permissible as long as they're not beyond
2 those that are imposed on the general public. If you look at 3 the line of prison access cases like Houchins and -- I think
4 it's cited in there, Pell, those say the same thing, that 5 those are burdens on news gathering unquestionably.

6 THE COURT: So Sherrill is no longer good law.

7 MR. KNAPP: We're not afraid of Sherrill, Your Honor.
8 I think the D.C. Circuit applied Sherrill and Karem --

9 THE COURT: Dealing with access to the White House
10 press area on a First Amendment claim.

11 MR. KNAPP: That's not correct, Your Honor. That 12 was --

13 THE COURT: Well, ultimately it was resolved perhaps 14 more on a Fifth Amendment claim.

15 MR. KNAPP: Well, Karem certainly was resolved entirely
16 on a Fifth Amendment claim. In Karem itself the D.C. Circuit
17 says we're addressing it as a Fifth Amendment. And it
18 interprets Sherrill in the same way. It says that the injury
19 that Sherrill recognized -- and in fact if you look at the 20 remedy that Sherrill ordered, it's a Fifth Amendment remedy.
21 It is additional process. It was publication of procedures
22 and an opportunity to be heard. Those are Fifth Amendment due
23 process remedies, not First Amendment remedies.

24 And I do want to emphasize -- I have to push back on the 25 suggestion from my friend on the other side, Karem definitely

1 did not have access to the White House. It would be a fairly
2 toothless, you know, sanction if he was still able to attend.
3 And if you look at -- I mean, you can read the decision for 4 yourself, obviously, but that's certainly how the D.C. Circuit
5 understood it. It talked about the injury as being exclusion
6 from the White House, talks about access to the White House
7 being like the currency of journalists in the modern age, 30
8 days of exclusion is an eternity. So if he had continued to 9 have access, that case -- as a factual matter I can tell you
10 that he did not have access, although that's obviously not in 11 this record.

12 But the day pass system wasn't at issue there, and the D.C.
13 Circuit's decision --

14 THE COURT: So there are quite a few cases, Karem,
15 Sherrill, and a couple of cases in this district court over 16 the past few years, that have dealt with access to the White
17 House press area. Right?

18 MR. KNAPP: Yes, Your Honor.

19 THE COURT: Have any of those cases decided that 20 there's no First Amendment right involved with respect to 21 access to the White House press area? Have any of those cases
22 decided that?

23 MR. KNAPP: No.

24 THE COURT: So they've all proceeded on the basis that 25 there was a First Amendment claim.

1 MR. KNAPP: Well, yes, Your Honor, but I --

2 THE COURT: They may not have decided a First Amendment
3 claim, but they've all proceeded on the basis that there was a
4 First Amendment claim.

5 MR. KNAPP: And Your Honor, as I said a few moments
6 ago, I agree that there would be a First Amendment claim here
7 if there were complete denial of access. Whether it be 8 meritorious is a separate question, but the --

9 THE COURT: And again, what's the best case you can 10 cite me for that specific proposition, that there's only a
11 First Amendment claim if there's a complete denial of access 12 as opposed to a significant burdening of the access? What 13 case do you want me to look at that actually says that?

14 MR. KNAPP: So I think the cases I cited earlier. I 15 mean, none is obviously specifically on point here, this is 16 the only case like this where he still has access. But so if 17 you look at the long line of cases that talk about burdens on 18 the free press, those are dealing with burdens on publication.
19 If you look at the cases that say there is no First Amendment
20 violation, those are dealing with burdens on news gathering.
21 So that's a distinction that the cases clearly draw between 22 news gathering itself and publication or speech on the other 23 side.

24 THE COURT: Let's assume for the moment, so we don't
25 take up all your time on whether there's a First Amendment

1 injury, let's assume for a moment that we're into the First 2 Amendment analysis. And as I said to your counterpart on the 3 other side, a lot of ink has been spilled on whether it's a
4 Sherrill analysis versus a forum analysis, and if a forum
5 analysis, is it a limited public forum or a nonpublic forum.
6 Does it really matter that much, or is the same standard
7 applied in all those settings?

8 And I'll start with Sherrill. If Sherrill does provide a
9 basis for the Court to look in at the hard pass policy
10 independent of forum analysis, what standard would I apply?
11 Would I apply the same reasonable standard that I apply in the 12 forum analysis?

13 MR. KNAPP: I suppose it would be similar. I think 14 what Sherrill actually required, right, was the publication of 15 standards and an opportunity to be heard. And the White House
16 has done that with the hard pass policy here.

17 THE COURT: Those are the Fifth Amendment rather than 18 the First Amendment components.

19 MR. KNAPP: Yes. I mean, I don't think that -- I think 20 reasonableness is the correct standard, to the extent that 21 Sherrill considered it under the First Amendment, it would -- 22 saying that it required reasonableness.

23 THE COURT: And that's the correct standard under 24 either nonpublic forum or limited public forum.

25 MR. KNAPP: I believe in a limited public forum, Your

1 Honor, that -- I mean, the delineation between different types
2 of forums is a little muddled in the case law, but the 3 distinction we've tried to draw in our cases between no forum
4 analysis at all and nonpublic forum -- so Price says you don't
5 do forum analysis when it's not speech, when it's the free
6 speech conduct. That's what we think applies here.

7 But that is the same standard as would apply in a nonpublic
8 forum, which is the reasonableness and viewpoint neutral. And 9 I think -- I mean, under those standards, this policy which,
10 as you discussed with my friend on the other side, all it does 11 is it looks to an outside professional body that has decades,
12 over a century of experience.

13 THE COURT: So why is it reasonable to look to that 14 outside body? Why is it reasonable to effectively leave the 15 access decision regarding White House access to the press
16 gallery in Congress? Why is that reasonable?

17 MR. KNAPP: Well, I want to emphasize again, it is not 18 leaving the decision entirely to them because the day pass
19 system still exists. So if you're looking at the system that 20 regulates access to the White House press areas as a whole, it
21 includes the day pass system.

22 THE COURT: The decision on the easier access through 23 the hard pass is left to -- effectively left to the press
24 gallery. So why is it reasonable to do that?

25 MR. KNAPP: Because they are a body of journalists.

1 They are professionals who are better suited, or well suited
2 at least, to make the professional judgment about who should 3 be entitled to the -- to I guess the title of bona fide
4 journalist of repute in the profession.

5 The constitution consistently said -- the cases
6 interpreting the First Amendment consistently say there's no
7 real constitutional category of journalist; there's just 8 citizens, and sometimes they engage in press. And that's why
9 the cases all say that --

10 THE COURT: But isn't part of reasonableness, this 11 holistic reasonableness assessment -- I don't know whether 12 "isn't" is the right word. But might not the reasonableness
13 assessment include consideration of whether the decision can 14 be examined by the courts? Because their point, Mr. Ateba's 15 counsel, in part their point is, well, the White House is 16 jettisoning this decision over to the press galleries, where 17 it's unreviewable.

18 MR. KNAPP: Your Honor, I mean, certainly 19 reasonableness is a capacious standard. What I would say,
20 though, is that under First Amendment reasonableness, that 21 inquiry, it need not be the most reasonable or the only 22 reasonable. It's I think as the D.C. Circuit said in Price, 23 it's like one notch above rational basis.

24 So, you know, if it were a private entity, I think there
25 would still be hurdles to bringing a lawsuit against them on

1 the basis of unbridled discretion, for example. I think --
2 and, you know, maybe the broader point is that in the event
3 that there's a credible claim of viewpoint discrimination by 4 the press galleries, the remedy for that would probably be an
5 as-applied challenge as opposed to a facial challenge. I
6 mean, even in the First Amendment context, facial challenges
7 are disfavored.

8 And, for example, in the Los Angeles Police Department case
9 cited in our brief, that was a case where, again, drawing that 10 distinction between restrictions on speech and press and 11 restrictions on gathering information, saying that a facial 12 challenge was completely inappropriate in that context. Now, 13 that was an overbreadth, which is slightly different than an 14 unbridled discretion. But facial challenge is highly unusual
15 in any context, but it's also unusual in the First Amendment
16 context.

17 THE COURT: So on the unbridled discretion, part of 18 your argument seems to be that unbridled discretion doesn't 19 apply in a nonpublic forum. Correct?

20 MR. KNAPP: Yes. Absolutely.

21 THE COURT: How does that comport with the Supreme 22 Court's decision in Mansky? Isn't Mansky a case where the 23 Supreme Court applied a type of unbridled discretion analysis
24 to a polling place, which is basically a nonpublic forum?

25 MR. KNAPP: So certainly it applied a similar analysis.

1 I think it was very careful to put it under the reasonableness
2 context. You know, it says unreasonable in this context. In 3 the context of a rule that prohibits expression, the D.C.
4 Circuit says the same thing.

5 Obviously, the cases before them did deal with regulations
6 that limited core political expression in the case of Mansky
7 and Zukerman, which was -- the standard being challenged was 8 literally, is it political. And so I think when you're doing
9 the reasonableness analysis, the specific context is extremely 10 important. And in all three of those cases that they cited,
11 it dealt with the application of regulation that restricted 12 speech. And this is not that.

13 THE COURT: Some kind of expression.

14 MR. KNAPP: Some kind of expression.

15 THE COURT: So let's examine that for a second. Why
16 isn't a reporter's questions expressive? The White House
17 invites reporters to this press area, so to speak, with 18 respect to invites, to the press area, in order for them to 19 engage in an exchange with the White House.

20 Yes, perhaps the primary purpose is for the press to gather
21 information, but the White House is also hearing the questions
22 that they're asking, what the press is concerned about. And 23 often there's a back and forth that occurs between a member of 24 the press and the White House spokesperson, where a question
25 will be asked, an answer will be given, a follow-up question,

1 and then further answer. It could involve two or three
2 follow-up questions. That seems to me to be very expressive
3 on the part of both parties in this communication, this 4 dialogue that is occurring where the White House is getting
5 information too in terms of what is of concern to the press
6 and therefore perhaps the public. Why isn't that expressive?

7 MR. KNAPP: It is literally speech, Your Honor,
8 absolutely. And I think what I would point you to is to the 9 D.C. Circuit's decision in Price, where the individual there
10 was --

11 THE COURT: Yeah, but that was just the bald
12 filmmaking. It wasn't showing the film; it wasn't interacting 13 with any member of the public; it was just running the 14 projector. Not a projector, but running the camera.

15 MR. KNAPP: Yes, but he may have been narrating it.
16 The regulation at issue applied to all commercial filmmaking,
17 so it would have included things where you had actors putting 18 on a play in a public park, which is -- you know, that too is 19 expressive.

20 And if you look at the other cases, the Supreme Court
21 cases, for example, the prison cases, right, the issue there
22 is whether or not they can interview somebody. An interview
23 involves the exchange of ideas between two people. So it is 24 true that, obviously, you're correct that in the course of 25 speaking at a press conference the journalist is going to say

1 something, and through that, as you said, I think
2 communicate --

3 THE COURT: They're going to say something more than 4 just "I have a question." They're going to say here's what 5 the question is and here's why it's important for you to give 6 me an answer, and maybe, and here's why your answer is not 7 sufficient.

8 MR. KNAPP: Right. Absolutely. And --

9 THE COURT: I can't imagine that would one label that 10 not expressive.

11 MR. KNAPP: Well, I think --

12 THE COURT: The interchange that I'm describing --

13 MR. KNAPP: -- I guess I'd agree with you it's not 14 expressive, but that is not what is -- the way the cases have 15 dealt with that is to differentiate that from the core, what 16 is at issue, which is here news gathering.

17 And I have to emphasize again that Mr. Ateba can still do
18 that. He can still come to the press conference. He can 19 still try to get his questions answered. Although, as he 20 must, he acknowledges that he has no right to have his 21 questions answered. But using the day pass system, he still 22 can stand up and engage, and to the extent that that is 23 expressive conduct, he still can do that.

24 THE COURT: So Mansky, in making this assessment under 25 the forum of unbridled discretion on a reasonableness basis,

1 is really talking about an objective, workable or manageable
2 standard. How is the bona fide resident correspondents of 3 reputable standing an objective workable standard?

4 MR. KNAPP: Well, I mean -- I think Bellion Spirits,
5 the D.C. Circuit's decision in Bellion Spirits talks about the 6 way a term that may appear subjective can obtain meaning, and 7 one is through like long-standing use -- that's Kovacs, I
8 think, talks about "loud and raucous." Bellion Spirits, I
9 think that maybe that -- part of the decision is talking about 10 constitutional vagueness, but it's the same thing, it talks
11 about -- it's people who work in the profession -- in that 12 case it was about health claims on liquor labels -- they know
13 what is required under the terms of the admittedly somewhat
14 open-ended terms.

15 And I believe it's the same here, where there's a hundred 16 years of the press galleries applying the standard. You have,
17 as you alluded to earlier, you have the additional context
18 setting out, you know, who would qualify, you know, not 19 engaged in lobbying, avoids conflicts of interest. You have 20 the ethical standards that we referred the Court to. There's 21 a lot of context that is built up around this standard which 22 has existed for so long and which has been in use both by 23 Congress and other government entities for so long.

24 And so it is true that it's an open-ended word, but in the 25 context it's not -- it doesn't have no meaning, you know. And

1 I think -- I think if you look to the Supreme Court's decision
2 in Arkansas Education -- I can't remember the rest of it,
3 Public TV versus Forbes, or whatever it was, you know, there
4 the standard that was applied was "serious candidate" or 5 something like that. And I think that in the context of a 6 news organization hosting a debate, for example, that had 7 meaning.

8 Now, that's not exactly how the Court addressed it in that 9 case, but the same sort of analysis applies. Sometimes the 10 context matters. And that's why, for example, the McDaniel
11 case that they cite, which talks about citizens of repute for 12 witnessing an execution, is completely inapplicable here, is 13 that it's a completely different context with no apparent
14 history, or at least none that has been discussed, that would 15 build up the meaning around it.

16 THE COURT: Now, part of your argument is that the 17 White House is not responsible for the decisions of the press
18 galleries. So would it matter if I found that the press
19 galleries are effectively agents of the White House?

20 MR. KNAPP: Well, I think you absolutely cannot find 21 that, Your Honor.

22 THE COURT: I absolutely cannot find that.

23 MR. KNAPP: They are an agent of Congress. And to say
24 that an agent of Congress is controlled by the White House
25 would be very unusual. But they are not. I mean, there's no

1 indication whatsoever that they are directed or controlled by 2 the White House. They are making independent decisions about
3 access to the congressional press gallery --

4 THE COURT: So should I deny the unbridled discretion
5 claim because the discretion is being exercised by a different
6 decisionmaker?

7 MR. KNAPP: I think you could deny it for that reason,
8 or you could deny it for the perhaps more straightforward
9 reason that the six criteria listed by the White House, which 10 are the criteria that the White House use, are objective. And 11 so you never kind of peek under the curtain I guess or go to 12 the next step.

13 THE COURT: Is there any other case that you're aware 14 of where a First Amendment unbridled discretion or First 15 Amendment claim utilizing the unbridled discretion doctrine
16 has been denied because the discretion was being exercised by 17 some other decisionmaker?

18 MR. KNAPP: I'm not aware of any other case that arises
19 in a similar context that goes in either direction.

20 THE COURT: So the fact -- is the fact that the 21 discretion is exercised elsewhere important to the resolution
22 here? Even though there's no case I can really look to to 23 stand for that proposition because there's no case going 24 either way on that, there just isn't another case dealing with 25 that situation.

1 MR. KNAPP: Yes. It is important because as you were
2 discussing earlier, I mean, if we go to first principles here
3 about what this doctrine is about, is it's a prophylactic rule
4 that is aiming at preventing the opportunity for the licensing
5 body to engage in viewpoint discrimination. And here the 6 licensing body is the White House, regulating access to the 7 White House. I mean, the White House can't engage in 8 discrimination through the press gallery system because it has 9 no control over their decisions.

10 THE COURT: All right. Are you addressing the 11 viewpoint discrimination claim, or is that your colleague?

12 MR. KNAPP: No, my colleague will be addressing that.

13 THE COURT: And also the APA claim?

14 MR. KNAPP: That's correct.

15 THE COURT: Anything else you want to say with respect
16 to the First and Fifth Amendment claim?

17 MR. KNAPP: No, Your Honor. If you have no further
18 questions.

19 THE COURT: All right. Mr. Borson.

20 MR. BORSON: Good morning, Your Honor. Joseph Borson
21 on behalf the United States. So I'll be brief on both points
22 because I think they're both fairly straightforward.

23 On the viewpoint discrimination point, as you discussed
24 with my colleague on the other side, they don't contest that 25 the hard pass policy is itself facially viewpoint

1 discriminatory. Their claim is essentially that it was issued
2 to intentionally prevent Mr. Ateba from gaining a hard pass on 3 the basis of his viewpoint, on the basis of his ideology or 4 his perspective. And that allegation simply is not plausible
5 based on the facts that he pled in the complaint. And so that 6 resolves that there.

7 If you look at the complaint, the only evidence that he has 8 that the White House took any action with respect to the hard
9 pass policy based on him is really the March Ted Lasso press
10 conference where he himself notes that he engaged in the sort
11 of tactics, he interrupted the press secretary. He cites 12 articles that note how the press conference descended into 13 chaos based on his actions. It's clearly based on his 14 actions, even as he pleads it, not on the content of his 15 questions --

16 THE COURT: They would ask that I infer that there is a 17 viewpoint basis lying behind that.

18 MR. BORSON: I don't think that inference would be 19 plausible right there, Your Honor. And I think the reason why
20 it's not plausible is because Mr. Ateba had been in the press
21 room for five years before that, presumably asking the same
22 types of questions. In his reply brief, the fourth brief of 23 the cycle, he identifies his perspective as U.S.-African 24 politics, and that's his viewpoint.

25 There's no indication that the White House took any action

1 until, as he states, he started engaging in these assertive
2 tactics such as interrupting the press secretary, such as 3 causing what reporters and colleagues called chaos. That's 4 based on his conduct. That has nothing to do with the content
5 or the ideology reflected in his viewpoint and in his 6 questions.

7 THE COURT: So they fault the defendants for not 8 submitting declarations or evidence as to the reasons for 9 adopting the hard pass policy.

10 MR. BORSON: I don't think you should, Your Honor, and 11 I think the reason why you shouldn't is because on the face of 12 the complaint, their allegations aren't plausible. And the 13 way -- as Your Honor well knows, the obligation to put forward
14 evidence wouldn't arise until there had been plausible
15 allegations of a claim on which relief could be granted. So 16 we don't even need to get to that point. The allegations they 17 have here on viewpoint discrimination are simply implausible
18 and that closes the door here.

19 THE COURT: So the procedural posture is a little off
20 here. Why should I grant summary judgment to the White House
21 on this claim when they have not been able to conduct any 22 discovery? Is it more, as they have put it, and as you have 23 put it now, a plausibility question and therefore more whether 24 I should dismiss that claim?

25 There was a motion to dismiss that was filed in the context

1 of the preliminary injunction proceedings, I believe. But now
2 we have a motion for summary judgment. Is what you're asking
3 me to do effectively to dismiss that claim because it doesn't
4 satisfy the Twombly and the plausibility standard?

5 MR. BORSON: Effectively, this is a 12(b)(6) motion in 6 the context of a Rule 56 motion. And I think the reason why
7 this has come up in this way is because, as Your Honor noted,
8 the sort of odd procedural posture here. I think we've laid 9 out our plausibility arguments, I think they've laid out their 10 plausibility arguments.

11 THE COURT: It's fully briefed as far as you're 12 concerned.

13 MR. BORSON: As far as we're concerned, it's fully 14 briefed. To the extent it would be treated as a dismissal
15 under Rule 12(b)(6) rather than summary judgment in favor of 16 the defendants under Rule 56, we think the substantive 17 standards would be the same. If that's a cleaner procedural 18 way of getting to the same results, just given this procedural 19 posture, we have no objections to that. I think we all agree
20 that this is a plausibility standard here.

21 THE COURT: All right. What about the APA claim?

22 MR. BORSON: I mean, I think the APA claim, as your 23 colloquy illustrated, this was a White House action. The 24 May 5 letter makes clear that this was a White House action.
25 The Fleischer Declaration that we put forward from the Secret

1 Service makes clear that the White House decided who would be 2 getting passes and who wouldn't be --

3 THE COURT: Well, Secret Service does have independent
4 statutory responsibility to control access to the White House.

5 MR. BORSON: They do, but there's no evidence that 6 those authorities were implicated here. I think this would be 7 a different case if this was like Sherrill where the Secret
8 Service said no, no, this particular person is a security
9 threat and so they can't get in.

10 But that's not what happened here. What happened here is 11 the White House said, okay, everyone's hard passes are going 12 to expire on July 31. And then everyone has to reapply, and 13 then what the White House then did was saying, okay, of the 14 people who've applied, these people meet the standards so 15 their hard passes stay on, this list of about 500 people don't 16 meet those standards, Secret Service, turn those off.

17 So the reason there's a Secret Service role is really just 18 why we're in this context in the first place. If this was a 19 different entity where the White House itself was able to 20 issue security passes, then I don't think there would be a 21 discussion here at all. Which is why I think the Judicial
22 Watch v. Secret Service case, although it's obviously a FOIA
23 case, is so instructive, because that case, the D.C. Circuit
24 addressed the same point, where the plaintiffs were saying,
25 you know, look, these are Secret Service records of who gets

1 in the White House. And then the Court basically said, yes,
2 in some sense that is true, but these are really White House
3 records that illustrate White House equities. The only reason
4 these are in the Secret Service in the first place is because
5 of the unique status of the White House. But for separation
6 of powers reasons, we're not going to construe those as agency
7 records under the FOIA, which is essentially the same
8 definition for these purposes as the APA.

9 THE COURT: So if I, either under the APA or the First 10 Amendment, decided that a satisfactory or reasonable
11 explanation had not been given for the agency action, or that 12 the standard, wherever, in the press gallery context or in the 13 White House hard pass policy, did not comport with the law and 14 had to be revised, who would I remand the case to and who 15 would do those revisions or provide that explanation?

16 MR. BORSON: The White House press office, Your Honor.
17 These are White House press office standards. And that's why
18 the APA claim doesn't work, because it would be a remand -- I
19 suppose if it was a remand to the Secret Service, the Secret
20 Service would hold their heads and say White House, please 21 give us a policy.

22 They would then say here's the White House's policy because 23 they decide who does and does not get into the press room,
24 which is just this court reviewing the White House's actions
25 under the APA by another name, which we know from cases dating

1 back under the Soucie line isn't appropriate under the APA
2 action because the APA doesn't reach the White House, or at 3 least those components of the White House.

4 THE COURT: All right. Mr. Borson, anything else?

5 MR. BORSON: No, Your Honor.

6 THE COURT: Thank you.

7 MR. BORSON: Thank you, Your Honor.

8 THE COURT: On rebuttal for five minutes will be
9 Mr. Sell?

10 MR. SELL: Thank you, Your Honor. I want to dispel
11 this notion that there isn't a burden that Mr. Ateba's facing 12 because he still has access to the day pass program. He is 13 effectively denied access for spontaneous media events. If 14 there is a significant event that prompts all the hard pass
15 holders to go to the briefing room, take up all the spots
16 while he's standing in line with his day pass, he's 17 effectively excluded from --

18 THE COURT: That hasn't happened yet.

19 MR. SELL: It hasn't happened yet, but it certainly 20 could happen.

21 THE COURT: Indeed, he hasn't ever been denied access
22 to the White House, has he?

23 MR. SELL: Not yet, Your Honor. No. He has been 24 denied access to the hard pass program which would effectively
25 result in his denial.

1 THE COURT: It went into effect in July, right, so it's
2 been three or four months.

3 MR. SELL: August 1, Your Honor, yes. So that
4 certainly is a possibility, particularly with the global 5 environment we're in right now. And Your Honor, you're 6 correct that all of the cases that have looked at the press
7 credentialing at the White House have recognized that there is 8 a First Amendment interest involved here, and there is no
9 reason that that couldn't serve as a stand-alone claim for 10 violating traditional First Amendment doctrines that are in 11 place right now. It makes no sense that you would also have 12 to bring some kind of due process claim in order to enforce 13 his First Amendment rights as a journalist at the White House.

14 Also, Your Honor, this is a limited public forum. If you
15 want to go down the forum analysis route, this isn't a 16 nonpublic forum. The Court in Sherrill cited Conrad, which 17 was a limited public forum case. All the principles that 18 applied to a limited public forum are in full force here.

19 THE COURT: But the only difference in terms of the 20 analysis is a little more confidence that unbridled discretion
21 is a doctrine that applies.

22 MR. SELL: I think it has more teeth than that, Your 23 Honor. Under the limited public forum analysis, obviously 24 viewpoint discrimination is not allowed. But the individuals 25 for which the forum was opened up for, the class of

1 individuals, can't be denied access for impermissible reasons.
2 And those impermissible reasons would be an arbitrary
3 requirement such as having to get credentials from another
4 body in order to access the limited public forum. So if the 5 Court does go down the forum analysis route, this is a limited
6 public forum.

7 Also, Your Honor, in Price v. Garland, the news gathering
8 was explicitly exempted from that regulation. So this notion
9 that forum analysis is inapplicable in the news gathering
10 context, as the government is making, was not the holding in 11 Price, and in fact the regulations in that case explicitly 12 exempted news gathering. So I don't think you can take Price
13 for the proposition that accessing press facilities is not 14 appropriate for a forum analysis.

15 Also the "of repute" standard, it's unclear what that 16 standard -- the purpose of that standard is. So, you know,
17 there may be contexts in which some terms that aren't 18 really -- they're a little nebulous maybe and there might be 19 some subjectivity involved, there might be some contexts in 20 which that is permissible. But here it's unclear what the "of 21 repute" standard is designed to do other than give the 22 congressional press galleries the ability, this final box that 23 needs to be checked, give them the ability to say oh, you're 24 not of repute or reputable enough, therefore your application
25 is denied. That appears to be the only purpose of this --

1 THE COURT: Is there a history of a problem with the
2 reputable standard? It's been in existence, as I said
3 earlier, since the Gerald Ford administration. Is there any 4 history of difficulty --

5 MR. SELL: I don't know if --

6 THE COURT: -- that anybody is aware of? I know you
7 say well, of course not, because it's not reviewable.

8 MR. SELL: Exactly, Your Honor. I don't know if 9 anyone's ever filed a lawsuit over it. They certainly haven't 10 been able to since the early '70s. So I think that's probably 11 the primary explanation for why it hasn't been an issue.

12 THE COURT: You do agree -- I guess I think you agree
13 that both the limited public forum and the nonpublic forum 14 have the same basic test that applies. In Price it was 15 described for a nonpublic forum as viewpoint neutral and 16 reasonable given the purpose of the forum and all the 17 surrounding circumstances. And in Price for a limited public 18 forum it was described as reasonable and viewpoint neutral in 19 view of the purpose for which the forum was opened. Those 20 sound like virtually identical standards.

21 MR. SELL: Yes, Your Honor. And if that's how the D.C.
22 Circuit has framed it, then I think that's the framework that 23 the Court is obligated to operate under, although I think
24 there is a strong argument that under Supreme Court precedent
25 there may be a little bit more of a distinction there in that

1 a limited public forum is a breed of designated public forum.
2 It's one for a limited purpose instead of an unlimited
3 purpose. And in that context I do think that, you know, there
4 might be a little bit more teeth to this than just reasonable
5 restrictions for the government property at issue.

6 THE COURT: Price cites Supreme Court law for both of 7 those standards in both those contexts.

8 MR. SELL: Yes, Your Honor. And, Your Honor, to the --
9 this argument that Mr. Ateba was -- that the White House
10 changed the hard pass program because of his conduct and not 11 his viewpoint, he had no notice that his conduct was going to 12 lead to White House wholesale excluding the hard pass program, 13 to revising the hard pass program to exclude him from it. He 14 had no notice of that.

15 THE COURT: That's not a claim that's in your 16 complaint, though.

17 MR. SELL: No, Your Honor. And if the Court were to 18 not agree with us on our existing claims, then we would ask to 19 be able to file an amended complaint to make this argument
20 because we think that, given the briefing, the admissions the 21 government has made in its briefing that it was his conduct, I 22 guess, that prompted the change to the hard pass program, we 23 would --

24 THE COURT: I don't think they've made that admission.

25 MR. SELL: It appears to be.

1 THE COURT: I think they've said that that's what your
2 complaint actually amounts to. But go ahead.

3 MR. SELL: Your Honor, if that is indeed the -- you
4 know, their position on how our complaint is currently 5 structured, we would think that it would be appropriate to 6 flesh this out with more facts through an amended complaint,
7 especially given the expedited time frame that we've been on 8 here.

9 THE COURT: All right. Thank you, Mr. Sell.

10 MR. SELL: Thank you, Your Honor.

11 THE COURT: Thank you all. The case is submitted. I
12 will try to get a decision out in a reasonably prompt time
13 frame as I've promised in this whole proceeding. I thank you
14 all for the quality of the briefing and the arguments today,
15 and have a good day.

SIMON ATEBA,

Plaintiff,

v.

KARINE JEAN-PIERRE, in her official

Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

For decades, the White House has granted special access passes—known as hard passes—to journalists tasked with reporting on the President and his administration. See generally Sherrill v. Knight, 569 F.2d 124 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Hard pass holders can generally come and go from the White House as they wish, subject to a security screening at the door. On May 5, 2023, the White House announced changes to the criteria for obtaining a hard pass, reimplementing a requirement that had been in place for most of the last 50 years—that the applicant hold a press credential from the Supreme Court or one of the press galleries of the United States Congress. Journalists who could not satisfy these requirements by July 31, 2023, would lose their expedited access. Simon Ateba, the White House correspondent for Today News Africa, was one of about 500 journalists whose hard passes were deactivated under this policy. Ateba, who is known for interrupting press briefings and attracting the ire of the Press Secretary, alleges that the new policy was designed to exclude him from the press room. In this lawsuit, he claims White House Press Secretary Karine Jean-Pierre (the “White House”) engaged in unconstitutional viewpoint discrimination against him by changing the criteria, and that the new hard pass policy unreasonably confers unbridled discretion on the congressional press galleries. He also claims that Director of the United States

Secret Service Kimberly Cheatle and the United States Secret Service (collectively “the Secret Service”) acted arbitrarily and capriciously in deactivating his hard pass. Before the Court are the parties’ cross-motions for summary judgment.

Background

I. Factual Background

A. Press Access to the White House

As the residence and offices of the President, his family, and his personal staff, access to the White House is tightly controlled. However, “the White House has voluntarily decided to establish press facilities for correspondents who need to report therefrom.” Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 124. The press facilities include the James S. Brady Briefing Room, the press offices, the press apron, the North Grounds Stand Up Area, and the Driveway (collectively, the “Press Area”). Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Statement of Material Facts as to Which There Is No Genuine Dispute [ECF No. 26-1] (“Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts”) ¶ 1.

The White House offers journalists two principal ways of accessing the Press Area. First, a reporter may obtain a “temporary press pass,” known as a “day pass,” which is a daily credential issued upon application to the Secret Service. Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Statement of Material Facts as to Which There Is No Genuine Dispute [ECF No. 23-3] (“Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts”) ¶¶ 2–3. Second, a reporter can obtain a “permanent press pass,” known as a “hard pass,” which is a credential that allows him or her to come and go freely once the pass is issued. Id. ¶ 2.¹ Day pass and hard pass holders can access the Press Area at the same times (from 5:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m.). Id. ¶ 5; Third Decl. of Nathan Fleischer, Asst. to the Special Agent in Charge, Presidential Protective Div., U.S. Secret Service [ECF No. 22-2] (“3d Fleischer Decl.”) ¶¶ 7–8. However, a reporter with a day pass must await an escort from the gate to the Press Area, which can take up to 45 minutes. Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶¶ 3–4; see id. ¶ 4 (White House disputing to the extent chaperones are available at the top of each hour).

Unlike a hard pass holder who can access the White House as long as his or her pass is active, a day pass user must submit a brief, online Secret Service form for each day that he or she wants to access the Press Area. Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 3; 3d Fleischer Decl. ¶ 9. Journalists are directed to submit the form by 5:00 p.m. the night before, although the White House has also submitted evidence that passes have been granted day-of, including to Ateba. Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶ 2. Because day passes are good for one day only, journalists must resubmit the form for every day they plan to access the Press Area. Id.

Journalists seeking long-term hard passes must secure approval from the Secret Service and the White House. The Secret Service reviews “whether the applicant presents a potential source of physical danger to the President and/or the family of the President so serious as to justify his or her exclusion from White House press privileges.” 31 C.F.R. § 409.1. The White House sets and enforces the remaining criteria for approval. See Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 1. These criteria are discussed at length below.

B. Simon Ateba

Ateba is the White House correspondent for Today News Africa, “a daily online news publication covering American politics and relations between the United States and African countries.” Verified Compl. [ECF No. 1] (“Compl.”) ¶ 3; see Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 6. He has worked as a journalist for fifteen years, the last five as a White House correspondent. Compl. ¶¶ 3, 38. For his first three years as a White House correspondent, he entered the White House with a day pass; from February 2021 through July 2023, he held a hard pass. Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 7. During this time, he alleges, he was ignored by the Press Secretary, who generally refused to take his questions or grant him interviews with the President. See Compl. ¶¶ 42–45; Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶ 9.

Ateba claims that in response to this alleged treatment, he has taken to speaking over the Press Secretary and other correspondents during White House briefings. Compl. ¶¶ 45–53; see Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 11. In one notable incident, on March 20, 2023, he interrupted the Press Secretary’s introduction of the cast members of the television show “Ted Lasso,” who were at the White House to speak about mental health. See Compl. ¶ 49; Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶ 10. The disturbance resulted in national news coverage. See id. ¶ 50. His pattern of disruption has drawn rebuke from the White House Press Secretary and other correspondents. Id. ¶¶ 48, 50, 52. Even amid the well-known rough-and-tumble atmosphere of the White House Press Area, see Karem v. Trump, 960 F.3d 656, 665 (D.C. Cir. 2020), Ateba’s behavior has turned heads. See Compl. ¶¶ 45–53; Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶ 20.

C. Changes in White House Policy

On May 5, 2023, the White House announced two new policies relating to White House access. First, the White House issued a conduct policy, setting forth expectations for behavior in the Press Area, and the process for revoking hard pass credentials of journalists who did not comply (“Conduct Policy”). Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 10; see Compl., Ex. A [ECF No. 1-1] (“May 5, 2023 Letter”) at 2. Second, the White House announced that all hard passes would expire on July 31, 2023, unless the holder met the following criteria (“Hard Pass Policy”):

1. Full-time employment with an organization whose principal business is news dissemination (If you are freelance, we will need letters from two news organizations describing your affiliation, or, if you freelance primarily for one organization, a letter from that organization describing the extent and duration of your relationship with the organization);
2. Physical address (either residential or professional) in the greater Washington, D.C. area;

3. Have accessed the White House campus at least once during the prior six months for work, or have proof of employment within the last three months to cover the White House;
4. Assignment to cover (or provide technical support in covering) the White House on a regular basis;
5. Accreditation by a press gallery in either the Supreme Court, U.S. Senate or U.S. House of Representatives; and
6. Willingness to submit to any necessary investigation by the U.S. Secret Service to determine eligibility for access to the White House complex, where Secret Service will determine eligibility based on whether the applicant presents a potential risk to the safety or security of the President, the Vice President, or the White House complex.

Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 8–9. The White House did not explain the change, except to say that it sought to “be consistent with . . . prior administrations.” May 5, 2023 Letter. In briefing, the White House suggested the change was made to reduce the number of passes in circulation. Mem. of P. & A. in Supp. of Defs.’ Mot. for Summ. J. [ECF No. 22-1] (“Defs.’ Mot.”) at 2 (“[U]nder the now-rescinded policy, hard passes were automatically renewed and there were an excessive number in circulation—including many that were no longer in active use, leading to concerns with administrability and the security risks inherent in the ballooning number of passes that grant access to the White House.”).

Principally at issue in this case is Rule No. 5, the requirement that applicants hold credentials from the Supreme Court or one of the congressional press galleries. Access to the Supreme Court press gallery is determined by the public information office and is limited to journalists who cover the Court full time. See Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶ 14. Ateba has not secured a credential from the Supreme Court. See id. ¶ 14; Compl. ¶ 77; id. Ex. D [ECF No. 1-4] (Letter to Supreme Court Public Information Office). Given the undisputed and significant limitations on Supreme Court press passes, the Court credits Ateba’s assertion that it would not be possible for him to obtain such a credential. The Court therefore focuses its analysis on the congressional press galleries’ rules.

The congressional press galleries have long provided professional credentialing to journalists. See Consumers Union of U.S., Inc. v. Periodical Correspondents' Ass'n, 515 F.2d 1341, 1343–44 (D.C. Cir. 1975) (discussing history of credential press galleries and credentialing rules). The House and Senate each host four galleries for different types of journalists: daily press, periodical press, radio/TV, and press photographers. See id. Committees of journalists administer the credentialing requirements for the galleries, and journalists must renew their credentials every two years. See Defs.' Resp. to Pl.'s Facts ¶¶ 15–16. The credentialing requirements for the congressional press galleries are similar to each other. The rules for the Senate Daily Press Gallery (also known as the Senate Press Gallery)—to which Ateba has sought access—are, in pertinent part:

3. The Standing Committee of Correspondents shall limit membership in the press galleries to bona fide correspondents of repute in their profession, under such rules as the Standing Committee of Correspondents shall prescribe.
4. An applicant for press credentials through the Daily Press Galleries must establish to the satisfaction of the Standing Committee of Correspondents that he or she is a full-time, paid correspondent who requires on-site access to congressional members and staff.

Correspondents must be employed by a news organization:

- (a) with General Publication periodicals mailing privileges under U.S. Postal Service rules, and which publishes daily; or
- (b) whose principal business is the daily dissemination of original news and opinion of interest to a broad segment of the public, and which has published continuously for 18 months.

The applicant must reside in the Washington, D.C. area, and must not be engaged in any lobbying or paid advocacy, advertising, publicity or promotion work for any individual, political party, corporation, organization, or agency of the U.S. Government, or in prosecuting any claim before Congress or any federal government department, and will not do so while a member of the Daily Press Galleries.

Applicants' publications must be editorially independent of any institution, foundation or interest group that lobbies the federal government, or that is not principally a general news organization. Failure to provide information to the Standing Committee for this determination, or misrepresenting information, can result in the denial or revocation of credentials.

Req. for Judicial Notice, Ex. E (U.S. Senate Daily Press Gallery, Governing Rules) [ECF No. 24-6] (“Senate Daily Press Gallery Rules”); see U.S. House Periodical Press Gallery, Rules and Regulations, <https://periodical.house.gov/accreditation/rules-and-regulations> (“House Periodical Press Gallery Rules”) (similar);² see Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶¶ 17–19.

D. Effect of White House Policy Changes on Ateba

On July 11, 2023, Ateba received a reprimand letter pursuant to the new Conduct Policy. Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 12. The letter outlined four instances when he disrupted press briefings and afforded him an opportunity to respond to the allegations. Compl., Ex. B [ECF No. 1-2] (“Reprimand Letter”) (detailing incidents on May 13, 2022, December 8, 2022, March 20, 2023, and June 26, 2023). While the letter contained a warning that Ateba’s continued disruptions could result in the suspension or revocation of his hard pass, the White House did not revoke Ateba’s hard pass pursuant to the Conduct Policy. Id.; see Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 12. On August 1, 2023, the White House directed the Secret Service to deactivate hard passes for approximately 500 journalists who did not qualify under the new Hard Pass Policy. Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 14.

² Ateba has submitted an unopposed motion for the Court to take judicial notice of the following documents: (1) Brief of The White House Correspondents’ Ass’n as Amicus Curiae Supp. Appellee, Karem v. Trump, Case No. 19-5255 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 13, 2020) [ECF No. 24-2]; (2) Transcript of Oral Decision, CNN v. Trump, 1:18-cv-02610-TJK, at *7:19–22 (D.D.C. Nov. 16, 2018) [ECF No. 24-3]; (3) Congressional News Media and the House and Senate Press Galleries, Congressional Research Service (Apr. 13, 2017) [ECF No. 24-4] at 4; (4) Periodical Press Gallery, Accreditation, House Periodical Press Gallery [ECF No. 24-5]; and (5) Senate Daily Press Gallery Rules. Req. for Judicial Notice [ECF No. 24].

The Court may take judicial notice of facts “not subject to reasonable dispute” that are “generally known within the trial court’s territorial jurisdiction” and “can be accurately and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned.” Fed. R. Evid. 201(b). The motion is granted to the extent the facts are relied upon in this opinion. The Court also takes judicial notice of the rules of the House Periodical Press Gallery, since Ateba has already pointed the Court to another part of that gallery’s accreditation procedures. Because Ateba raises a facial challenge to the policy, it is appropriate for the Court to consider different rules under which a journalist can obtain a credential.

Ateba applied for a credential from the Senate Daily Press Gallery on June 5, 2023. Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶ 17; see Compl., Ex. C [ECF No. 1-3] (Letter to Senate Daily Press Gallery). His request is under consideration but, as of October 11, 2023, has not been granted. Defs.’ Resp. to Pl.’s Facts ¶¶ 18–19. Ateba did not apply to renew his hard pass before it was deactivated. See Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 13. Ateba has continued to access the Press Area with a day pass. Id. ¶ 15; see 3d Fleischer Decl. ¶ 17 (stating that, since Ateba’s hard pass was deactivated, he has been granted day pass access to the White House each time he sought it, and that he has “entered the White House on several of those occasions”).

II. Procedural Background

On August 10, 2023, Ateba sued White House Press Secretary Karine Jean-Pierre, in her official capacity, as well as Director of the United States Secret Service Kimberly Cheatle, in her official capacity, and the United States Secret Service. Compl. ¶¶ 19–21. Ateba simultaneously moved for a preliminary injunction to enjoin the Hard Pass Policy and restore his hard pass. Pl.’s Mot. for Prelim. Inj. [ECF No. 2].

Ateba makes three principal claims. First, he alleges that the Hard Pass Policy violates the First Amendment on its face, because it confers “unbridled discretion” on the congressional press gallery committees to determine who can obtain a hard pass (Count One). Compl. ¶¶ 83–89. Second, he alleges that the White House discriminated against him based on his viewpoint by adopting Hard Pass Policy criteria “specifically designed to exclude [him] from eligibility” (Count Two). Id. ¶¶ 90–95. And third, Ateba alleges the Secret Service violated the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) by deactivating his hard pass without reasoned explanation (Count Three). Id. ¶¶ 96–103.

The Court denied Ateba's motion for a preliminary injunction, concluding that Ateba had failed to show he was "likely to suffer irreparable harm during the pendency of this litigation." Ateba v. Jean-Pierre, Civ. A. No. 23-2321 (JDB), 2023 WL 5748567, at *1 (D.D.C. Sept. 6, 2023). The Court concluded based on the facts presented that Ateba "remain[ed] able to enter the White House using the day pass system," which the Court found was an "acceptable alternative for the duration of the litigation." Id. at *4. However, "so that the merits of Ateba's challenge [could] be swiftly adjudicated," the Court ordered the parties to submit summary judgment briefing on an expedited schedule. Id. at *1, *6.

The White House submitted a motion for summary judgment on all three counts. Defs.' Mot. Ateba submitted a cross-motion for summary judgment on the facial First Amendment challenge and the APA challenge. Pl.'s Combined Mem. in Supp. of Summ. J. & Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. [ECF No. 23] ("Pl.'s Cross-Mot. & Opp'n"). Ateba also asked the Court to deny the White House's motion for summary judgment on the viewpoint discrimination challenge and order discovery from the White House. Id. The Court held an oral argument hearing on the summary judgment motions on November 2, 2023. The motions are now fully briefed and ripe for decision.

Legal Standard

A movant is entitled to summary judgment if he can show that "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). At the summary judgment stage, the court must "examine the facts in the record and all reasonable inferences derived therefrom in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Robinson v. Pezzat, 818 F.3d 1, 8 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (internal quotation marks omitted). "This mode of analysis serves to separate the jury functions of making credibility determinations, weighing the evidence, and drawing legitimate inferences from the facts from the district court's role as the arbiter of legal questions.” Id. (cleaned up). “When parties file cross-motions for summary judgment, each motion is viewed separately, in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, with the court determining, for each side, whether the Rule 56 standard has been met.” Lerch Bates, Inc. v. Michael Blades & Assocs., Ltd., Civ. A. No. 20-2223 (BAH), 2023 WL 6276643, at *9 (D.D.C. Sept. 26, 2023).

Analysis

I. First Amendment Injury

The White House claims that Ateba’s First Amendment challenges cannot get off the ground because he has not suffered a cognizable First Amendment injury. Defs.’ Mot. at 6. According to the White House, since Ateba has not lost access to the White House press briefings—only expedited hard pass access—he has suffered a mere inconvenience, not a violation of his First Amendment rights. See Defs.’ Combined Opp’n to Pl.’s Mot. for Summ. J. & Reply in Supp. of Defs.’ Mot. for Summ. J. [ECF No. 26] (“Defs.’ Reply & Opp’n”) at 1–3. The Court considers this argument relevant to Ateba’s facial challenge and his viewpoint discrimination claim.³

Generally, the First Amendment does not provide journalists any greater right of access to government property or information than it provides to members of the public, despite the fact that access to government information “might lead to more thorough or better reporting.” JB Pictures,

³ At oral argument, counsel for the White House acknowledged that this argument—while described as a challenge to Ateba’s “injury”—does not attack Ateba’s constitutional standing. Nor could it. Ateba is plainly injured by losing the hard pass, which provided him expedited access to the White House briefing room. See Flynt v. Rumsfeld, 355 F.3d 697, 702 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (appellants had standing where they sought and were denied access to accompany U.S. troops in combat); see also Zukerman v. U.S. Postal Serv., 567 F. Supp. 3d 161, 170–71 (D.D.C. 2021) (“[F]or Article III standing purposes at least, the required threshold is quite low.”). The loss of the hard pass is traceable to actions of the White House and the Secret Service. And his injury can be redressed by an order that the defendants reconsider the Hard Pass Policy or reinstate his hard pass.

Inc. v. Dep't of Def., 86 F.3d 236, 238 (D.C. Cir. 1996); see Branzburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665, 684 (1972). As it pertains to the press, the First Amendment primarily protects the right to “communicate information once it is obtained,” not the ability to collect it. Houchins v. KQED, Inc., 438 U.S. 1, 9 (1978) (plurality opinion). Hence, courts have generally refused to find that the First Amendment requires government entities to admit press into places not otherwise open to the public, provide enhanced access to information under the government’s control, or afford journalists heightened access to places open to the general public. See, e.g., L.A. Police Dep’t v. United Reporting Publ’g Corp., 528 U.S. 32, 40 (1999) (“California could decide not to give out arrestee information at all without violating the First Amendment”); Houchins, 438 U.S. at 16 (“[T]he media have no special right of access to [a jail] different from or greater than that accorded the public generally.”); Flynt v. Rumsfeld, 355 F.3d 697, 703 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (no First Amendment right for press to travel with the military during combat); JB Pictures, 86 F.3d at 242 (no First Amendment right for media to attend military funerals).

The First Amendment may, however, provide some protections when journalists are denied access to areas the government has specifically opened to the press. The D.C. Circuit has read the First and Fifth Amendments together to prohibit the denial of a journalist’s access to the White House Press Area without due process protections. Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 129–31; Karem, 960 F.3d at 664–67. This Court has, correspondingly, concluded that “the First and Fifth Amendments seem to require, at a minimum, that before determining which media organizations receive the limited access available, [a government agency] must not only have some criteria to guide its determinations, but must have a reasonable way of assessing whether the criteria are met.” Getty Images News Servs. Corp. v. Dep’t of Def., 193 F. Supp. 2d 112, 121 (D.D.C. 2002). Thus, where the Department of Defense lacked an articulated process for deciding which journalists could participate in the military's media flights to Guantanamo Bay in the wake of September 11, the plaintiffs had a cognizable injury under the First and Fifth Amendments. Id.

While the D.C. Circuit did not reach this question in Karem, the Court reads Sherrill to support a First Amendment claim at least when a journalist is excluded from the Press Area for arbitrary reasons. As the Sherrill court stated, "White House press facilities having been made publicly available as a source of information for newsmen, the protection afforded newsgathering under the first amendment guarantee of freedom of the press requires that this access not be denied arbitrarily or for less than compelling reasons." Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 129 (internal citations and footnote omitted). The White House's contention that Sherrill is a "due process case," "despite [its] First Amendment overtones," Defs.' Reply & Opp'n at 9, skips over a crucial part of Sherrill's analysis: although that court ultimately focused on the Secret Service's need to formalize security standards and provide applicants notice and an opportunity to respond to denials, the court first considered whether the standard articulated by the Secret Service in litigation—"whether the applicant presents a potential source of physical danger to the President and/or his immediate family so serious as to justify his exclusion"—comported with the First Amendment. Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 130 (footnote omitted).

Recent cases in other circuits have accepted the premise that the denial of a reporter's access to a press briefing is a cognizable First Amendment violation, reviewable in the traditional framework of a First Amendment forum and subject to an order requiring not only due process, but access. See John K. MacIver Inst. for Pub. Pol'y v. Evers, 994 F.3d 602, 610 (7th Cir. 2021) (reviewing criteria to access a media briefing under a First Amendment analysis for reasonableness and viewpoint neutrality); TGP Comme'ns, LLC v. Sellers, No. 22-16826, 2022 WL 17484331, at *4–5 (9th Cir. Dec. 5, 2022) (same); cf. Huminski v. Corsones, 396 F.3d 53, 88 (2d Cir. 2005)

(exclusion of individual journalist from all state courthouses otherwise open to press was “plainly overbroad” and “not ‘tailored’ to the threat”); Nicholas v. Bratton, 376 F. Supp. 3d 232, 259–60 (S.D.N.Y. 2019) (reviewing journalists’ equal access claim to crime scene under the First Amendment).

Unlike the prior cases involving restrictions on White House access, however, this case does not concern a denial of access to the Press Area. Ateba has lost his hard pass, but he can still access the Press Area with a day pass. Accordingly, Ateba asks the Court to find his access to the Press Area has been burdened by the loss of his hard pass, and that this burden constitutes a First Amendment injury. Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 17–18.⁴

The D.C. Circuit has not considered whether denial of a hard pass, when the reporter can still access the Press Area with a day pass, amounts to a First Amendment injury. See Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 130 (noting that denial of hard pass resulted in “exclusion . . . from White House press facilities”); Karem, 960 F.3d at 665 (describing sanction as “a month-long loss of White House access”). Neither party has cited any case directly addressing whether a burden on access to the Press Area (or any similar press area, for that matter) constitutes a First Amendment injury. Ateba urges the Court to rely on the general principle that “[g]overnmental action that ‘burdens’ First Amendment activity inflicts a cognizable injury no less than governmental action that ‘prohibit[s]’ such activity outright.” Pl.’s Mot. & Opp’n at 17 (quoting Sorrell v. IMS Health, Inc., 564 U.S. 552, 566 (2011) (citing, inter alia, United States v. Playboy Ent. Grp., 529 U.S. 803, 812 (2000) (limitations on television programming time); and Minneapolis Star & Trib. Co. v. Minn. Comm’r of Revenue, 460 U.S. 575, 582–83 (1983) (tax on the press))). The White House counters that only burdens on the “freedom of the media to communicate information” are actionable, not burdens on obtaining information from the government. Defs.’ Reply & Opp’n at 2 (quoting Houchins, 438 U.S. at 9); see Houchins, 438 U.S. at 4–5 (no First Amendment violation when news reporters were given “only limited access to the jail” on public tours that did not reach area of alleged prisoner abuse); Zemel v. Rusk, 381 U.S. 1, 17 (1965) (“[That] the prohibition of unauthorized entry into the White House diminishes the citizen’s opportunities to gather information . . . does not make entry into the White House a First Amendment right.”); cf. ACLU of Md. v. Wicomico Cnty., 999 F.2d 780, 786 (4th Cir. 1993) (county did not engage in First Amendment retaliation by revoking an ACLU paralegal’s special inmate access due to the ACLU’s lawsuit against the jail). However, as Ateba argues elsewhere, his participation in press conferences is arguably expressive. Because he “speaks through his questions—broadcast on live television—which express a point of view regarding the events he thinks are worthy of discussion,” Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 8, even burdens on his access to the press area could affect his right to “communicate information,” not only his right to collect it.

As an initial matter, the undisputed facts do not support an inference that Ateba’s access to the Press Area has been denied. It is undisputed that a day pass holder may access the same parts of the White House at the same times as a hard pass holder. And once the journalist reaches the Press Area, a day pass holder is not subject to any restrictions that would not also apply to a hard pass holder. If a day pass holder misses a spontaneous briefing, that is because he or she did not apply for a day pass, not because he or she has been excluded from the Press Area. No facts in the record suggest otherwise—that, for example, seats in the Press Area are reserved for hard pass holders, that day pass holders cannot bring in cameras, or that certain events or places are open to hard pass holders only. This case is, therefore, unlike Stevens v. N.Y. Racing Ass’n, 665 F. Supp.

164 (E.D.N.Y 1987), where the court found actionable a restriction prohibiting one journalist from entering a racetrack with a camera, while all other journalists were permitted to do so. Id. at 175.

However, the undisputed facts also demonstrate that being required to use a day pass instead of a hard pass burdens Ateba's Press Area access to some degree. Put differently, the facts in the record support an inference that a hard pass is a preferred form of access to a day pass. Whereas a hard pass holder can enter the White House at a moment's notice, other journalists must apply for a day pass up to a day in advance. Thus, a journalist who does not prophylactically apply for day passes might miss a late-scheduled press event. And while a hard pass holder can walk directly inside after security screening, a day pass holder must wait on an escort, which can take up to forty-five minutes depending on when the journalist arrives. Perhaps it is on account of these differences, or changes in the White House day pass policy over time, that the White House Correspondents Association has remarked in previous litigation that "without the access that a hard pass grants, a White House correspondent cannot effectively perform his or her duties, which include providing the public with on-the-spot news coverage of unforeseen and unscheduled events, along with cataloguing the daily activities of the head of the executive branch." Req. for Judicial Notice, Ex. A (Brief of The White House Correspondents' Ass'n as Amicus Curiae Supporting Appellee at 3, Karem v. Trump, No. 19-5255 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 13, 2020)).

Ultimately, the Court concludes that Ateba has an actionable First Amendment injury. As the D.C. Circuit recognized in Sherrill, the White House has opened the Press Area to journalists who need to report therefrom. 569 F.2d at 129. Although that case preceded modern-day forum analysis, the Sherrill court's characterization of the Press Area is akin to that of a First Amendment forum—government property that public officials have opened to certain members of the public for certain types of communication (here, newsgathering). Other circuits have similarly treated press briefings as First Amendment forums. See Evers, 994 F.3d at 610; TGP Commc’ns, 2022 WL 17484331, at *4–5. Accordingly, in deciding whether an injury exists, the Court must consider principally whether a burden on access to a First Amendment forum would amount to an injury. Even in a nonpublic forum—where government authority to restrict access is at its apex—a plaintiff has an actionable claim when the government has allegedly discriminated with respect to “who may use its facilities and on what terms.” Chi. Acorn v. Metro. Pier & Exposition Auth., 150 F.3d 695, 700 (7th Cir. 1998) (emphasis added) (finding actionable government agency’s disparate waiver of fees for use of meeting rooms). Where the White House “press facilities are perceived as being open to all bona fide Washington-based journalists,” Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 129 (footnote omitted), disparate forms of access to that forum are likewise actionable under the First Amendment.

This is not a case, as the government urges, where a member of the press seeks greater access—or better terms—than members of the public. See Houchins, 438 U.S. at 4–5. Nor is it a case about journalists seeking information in the government’s possession. See L.A. Police Dep’t, 528 U.S. at 40. Rather, this case involves a journalist seeking access to a forum—opened by the White House—on the same terms as other journalists. To conclude that only outright denials of access are actionable would undermine the protections established by Sherrill, for it would suggest that the White House could alter the hard pass criteria—and thereby impose disparate burdens on journalists seeking access to a place generally opened to them—in entirely viewpoint-discriminatory ways, and journalists would have no cause of action. Counsel for the White House admitted as much at oral argument. Oral Argument Rough Hr’g Tr. 35:2–16 (agreeing that under the Court’s hypothetical policy granting hard passes only to partisan news organizations, a journalist would have no cause of action).

That is not to say that every restriction the White House might impose on access to the White House violates the First Amendment. Indeed, the Court will conclude in this case that the Hard Pass Policy does not facially violate the First Amendment. However, it does mean that regulations as to who may obtain a hard pass—even when a day pass is available—are subject to First Amendment scrutiny. As the Court will discuss below, when the White House decides who gets expedited access and who does not, its regulations must be reasonable and viewpoint neutral.

II. Facial Challenge to the Hard Pass Policy

Ateba claims the Hard Pass Policy facially violates the First Amendment because the policy is unreasonable and confers “unbridled discretion” on the Press Galleries who supply the requisite credentials for obtaining a hard pass. The Court concludes that the policy is reasonable, and that discretion is sufficiently cabined to satisfy the First Amendment.

A. Legal Standards

When considering “[t]he amount of access to which the government must give the public for First Amendment activities,” courts generally apply forum analysis. Evers, 994 F.3d at 609. In a forum analysis, a court classifies the government property by type of forum (i.e., public, designated public, limited public, or nonpublic) and applies the appropriate standard to evaluate the constitutionality of limitations on the First Amendment activity. Id.⁵ Courts have the “least tolerance for restrictions on First Amendment freedoms” in public forums, id.,—places where people have historically “assemble[d] and . . . communicate[d] with others,” or which the government has intentionally opened for that purpose. Price v. Garland, 45 F.4th 1059, 1067–68 (D.C. Cir. 2022). In public forums, regulations based on the content of speech are subject to strict scrutiny—they must be necessary to serve a compelling state interest and narrowly drawn to achieve that end. Perry Educ. Ass’n v. Perry Loc. Educators’ Ass’n, 460 U.S. 37, 45 (1983). Content-neutral time, place and manner restrictions in public forums must meet intermediate scrutiny—they must be narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest. Id. at 45–46. The government has more latitude when regulating access to nonpublic and limited public forums, i.e., places not opened to public communication, or “limited to use by certain groups or dedicated solely to the discussion of certain subjects.” Price, 45 F.4th at 1068 (quoting Pleasant Grove City v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 470 (2009)). In a nonpublic or limited public forum, government regulations need only be viewpoint neutral and “reasonable given the purpose of the forum and all the surrounding circumstances.” Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).⁶

The parties dispute whether the Press Area is a nonpublic or limited public forum. The White House contends the Press Area is a nonpublic forum because access is “selective” and “limited to those who satisfy the six criteria or are otherwise invited; the White House has not generally opened its grounds to all comers or even to all journalists.” Defs.’ Mot. at 8. Ateba

⁶ Ateba also contends that Sherrill offers a test for evaluating the constitutionality of press pass restrictions. Pl.’ Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 5–7. Specifically, he points to the language in Sherrill stating that “access [should] not be denied arbitrarily or for less than compelling reasons.” Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 129; see id. at 130 (“[R]efusal must be based on a compelling governmental interest”). The White House contests Ateba’s assertion that Sherrill dictates any standard under the First Amendment. Defs.’ Reply & Opp’n at 9.

Since Sherrill preceded modern forum analysis, it is difficult to ascertain the precise legal equivalent, but the term “compelling” need not—and should not—be taken to suggest the application of a strict scrutiny standard (nor does Ateba ask the Court to apply strict scrutiny). Rather, when the Sherrill court briefly addressed the adequacy of the Secret Service’s substantive standard for regulating access to the White House—“whether the applicant presents a potential source of physical danger to the President and/or his immediate family so serious as to justify his exclusion”—the court acknowledged the standard was “circumspect” and allowed the Secret Service to “exercise[e] expert judgment which frequently must be subjective in nature.” Id. The latitude afforded the Secret Service suggested a standard similar to reasonableness. Accordingly, the Court finds review under the “reasonableness” standard of forum analysis appropriate even under Sherrill.

responds that the Press Area is a limited public forum because “[b]y long practice, the White House created and has operated the Press Area for the purpose of allowing journalists access to the White House to communicate with the President and his staff and to gather and disseminate the news.” Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 8. The parties’ positions on this point are at odds with their arguments elsewhere in the litigation. Where the White House contends elsewhere that access is available to any journalist who can pass a minimal Secret Service screening (i.e., eligible for a day pass), here the White House suggests access is open only to hard pass holders or invited guests. Ateba elsewhere suggests that a journalist cannot effectively access the Press Area without a hard pass. But here he contends the area is open to all journalists for reporting. Ultimately, the Court need not wade through the parties’ internal inconsistencies, since regardless of the type of forum at issue—nonpublic or limited public—the standard of review is the same: whether a challenged limitation is reasonable and viewpoint neutral. See ACLU Found. v. Washington Metro. Trans. Auth., 303 F. Supp. 3d 11, 17 (D.D.C. 2018).

In a nonpublic or limited public forum, “the State, no less than a private owner of property, has power to preserve the property under its control for the use to which it is lawfully dedicated.” Perry Educ. Ass’n, 460 U.S. at 46. “In addition to time, place, and manner regulations, the state may reserve the forum for its intended purposes, communicative or otherwise.” Id. Thus, in such forums, the government may draw distinctions based on “subject matter and speaker identity so long as the distinctions drawn are reasonable in light of the purpose served by the forum and are viewpoint neutral.” Cornelius v. NAACP Legal Def. & Educ. Fund, 473 U.S. 788, 806 (1985). “Although a speaker may be excluded from a nonpublic forum if he wishes to address a topic not encompassed within the purpose of the forum, or if he is not a member of the class of speakers for whose especial benefit the forum was created, the government violates the First Amendment when it denies access to a speaker solely to suppress the point of view he espouses on an otherwise includible subject.” Id. (internal citations omitted); see Christian Legal Soc’y Chapter of Univ. of Cal., Hastings College of L. v. Martinez, 561 U.S. 661, 680–82 (2010) (discussing parallel characteristics of a limited public forum).

Reasonableness requires “something more than the toothless ‘rational basis’ test used to review the typical exercise of a state’s police power.” Price, 45 F.4th at 1072. However, a regulation can be reasonable without being “the most reasonable or the only reasonable limitation.” Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 808. A court must assess limitations in light of the “purpose of the forum and all the surrounding circumstances.” Id. at 809. “The First Amendment does not demand unrestricted access to a nonpublic forum merely because use of that forum may be the most efficient means of delivering the speaker’s message.” Id. “In contrast to a public forum, a finding of strict incompatibility between the nature of the speech or the identity of the speaker and the functioning of the nonpublic forum is not mandated.” Id. at 808. The reasonableness of a limitation can be established “by evidence in the record or even by a commonsense inference.” Price, 45 F.4th at 1072.

The parties dispute whether a reasonableness analysis incorporates the doctrine of “unbridled discretion.” That doctrine emerged in the context of prior restraints on expressive activity, i.e., government rules prohibiting individual expression without a license. See Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 130–31 (1992) (public demonstration permitting); City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publ’g Co., 486 U.S. 750, 753, 763–64 (1988) (newsstand licensing). The Supreme Court has allowed facial challenges and even invalidated challenged regulations when they provide “overly broad licensing discretion” to the administrator. City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 764 (quoting Freedman v. State of Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 56 (1965)). The Court has stated that “narrow, objective, and definite standards [are needed] to guide licensing authority.” Forsyth County, 505 U.S. at 131 (quoting Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 150–151 (1969)). The doctrine seeks to reduce “the risk of self-censorship” by speakers hoping to obtain a necessary license, “and the risk that the licensing official, not limited by express standards, will use his power to suppress speech.” Southworth v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Wisc. Sys., 307 F.3d 566, 576 (7th Cir. 2002) (discussing City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 757–58). As a secondary component of the doctrine, the Supreme Court has sometimes required officials to abide by certain “procedural safeguards,” including expeditious judicial review and timelines for decision making. Thomas v. Chi. Park Dist., 534 U.S. 316, 321–22 (2002).

The White House contends that the unbridled discretion doctrine does not apply to access to the Press Area—a nonpublic or limited public forum—claiming that the Supreme Court silently rejected the application of the unbridled discretion doctrine to nonpublic forums by refusing to embrace the plaintiff’s argument in Arkansas Educational Television Commission v. Forbes, 523 U.S. 666 (1998). See Defs.’ Mot. at 9–10. However, as Ateba points out, the Supreme Court has extended at least some of the protections of the unbridled discretion doctrine to nonpublic forums. See Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 13–14. In Minnesota Voters Alliance v. Mansky, 138 S. Ct. 1876 (2018), the Court held that a Minnesota law banning “political” apparel in a nonpublic forum—the polling place—was unreasonable because it contained no “objective, workable standards.” Id. at 1891; see id. at 1888. Although the state had a legitimate goal of creating “an island of calm in which voters can peacefully contemplate their choices,” id. at 1887 (internal quotation marks omitted), it needed a standard that “articulate[d] some sensible basis for distinguishing what may come in from what must stay out,” id. at 1888.

The D.C. Circuit has since distilled “unbridled discretion” and the Mansky rule to a “single challenge”:

whether [a regulation] is so broad as to provide [the government] with no meaningful constraint upon its exercise of the power to squelch. If so, then it is not “reasonable” as that term is used in Mansky, and not constitutional because it provides [the government] with unbridled discretion. Put the other way around, if [the regulation] is capable of reasoned application, as Mansky demands, then it does not confer unbridled discretion upon [the government].

Am. Freedom Def. Initiative v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Auth. (“AFDI”), 901 F.3d 356, 372 (D.C. Cir. 2018); accord Zukerman v. U.S. Postal Serv., 961 F.3d 431, 449 (D.C. Cir. 2020).

The White House urges the Court to read this principle narrowly, arguing that the cases from which it emerged concern “core First Amendment activity: the expression of ideas,” Defs.’ Reply & Opp’n at 6, not “the distinct context of journalist access to what is, at most, a nonpublic forum,” Defs.’ Mot. at 10. But such a limitation is not warranted here. While the press may not challenge every law involving discretion as censorship, the press may challenge those laws “hav[ing] a close enough nexus to expression, or to conduct commonly associated with expression, to pose a real and substantial threat of the identified censorship risks.” City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 759.

White House press conferences involve a communicative exchange between the government and news reporters. As journalists ask questions, they raise issues important to their readers, and foster public discussion of the President’s administration. See Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 8. Other circuits have likewise recognized that participating in press conferences has a “nexus” to expression. See Evers, 994 F.3d at 611–12 (characterizing “gathering information for news dissemination” as a “form[] of expressive activity”); TGP Commc’ns, 2022 WL 17484331, at *4 (describing news conference as a place for “speech on limited topics”). Moreover, the purposes of the unbridled discretion doctrine would be served by its application to White House press access. See Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 14. A rule limiting press access without “objective, workable standards” could encourage journalists to self-censor to obtain access, and shelter decisionmakers from accountability if they excluded reporters based on their comments. Cf. Pen Am. Ctr. v. Trump, 448 F. Supp. 3d 309, 326–27 (S.D.N.Y. 2019) (concluding journalists adequately pleaded retaliation claim based on credential revocation after speaking critically of former President Trump). Accordingly, the Court will take account of the unbridled discretion doctrine in reviewing the Hard Pass Policy for reasonableness and viewpoint neutrality.

B. Reasonableness Review

As an initial matter, neither party argues that the press credentialing requirement is itself viewpoint discriminatory. Rather, Ateba argues that the requirement of credentialing by the press galleries is “arbitrary and unreasonable.”

The White House asserts that it “surely has a legitimate interest in maintaining a degree of control over media access to the White House complex,” Defs.’ Mot. at 11 (quoting Karem, 960 F.3d at 668), “given the purpose of White House briefings and the limits that must exist, for reasons of security and government efficiency, on access to the White House,” id. The White House further argues that “[i]mplicit in that interest is the ability . . . to limit the press areas to those engaged in journalism.” Id. The requirement of credentialing by an outside professional organization, it contends, is a reasonable way to do so. Id.

Ateba concedes that limiting Press Area access to those engaged in journalism is a “legitimate reason for requiring press credentials.” Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 15. However, he argues that the requirement of credentialing by the congressional press galleries is unreasonable for two principal reasons: first, because the gallery credentialing requirement is “standardless and susceptible to abuse,” id. at 10, and second, that requiring a press gallery credential lacks a “rational nexus with the government’s compelling reason for the restriction,” given that “[j]ournalists covering the White House might not want to cover Congress,” id. at 15.

The White House has long relied on credentialing by the congressional press galleries as a prerequisite to obtaining a press credential. See Sherrill, 569 F.2d at 129 n.19 (noting the requirement in 1977); Karem, 960 F.3d at 660 (same in 2020); see id. (“Forty years on [from Sherrill], today’s hard pass system is little changed . . .”). And the requirements for credentialing by the press galleries are functionally the same as they were around the time of Sherrill, including the requirement that journalists be “bona fide . . . reporters of reputable standing.” See Consumers Union of U.S., 515 F.2d at 1344–45 (quoting Rules Governing Periodical Press Galleries in 1975). While not passing directly on the question, the D.C. Circuit has never questioned the requirement of press credentialing or the substance of the standards. And as the White House points out, it is commonplace for government entities to rely on professional credentialing bodies as a means of determining access. See Defs.’ Mot. at 11 (citing examples).

The standards that the press galleries apply are also directly related to determining whether an applicant is “engaged in journalism,” and not a lobbyist or investor seeking to influence or derive benefit from access to government officials. See Defs.’ Reply & Opp’n at 10 (contending that the credentials are a “reasonable heuristic for identifying bona fide journalists and ensuring the White House press areas are properly limited to those genuinely engaged in journalistic pursuits”). Indeed, the rules of the Senate Daily Press Gallery—to which Ateba has sought access—require that the applicant be employed by a news organization “whose principal business is the daily dissemination of original news and opinion of interest to a broad segment of the public, and which has published continuously for 18 months,” and which is “editorially independent of any institution, foundation, or interest group that lobbies the federal government.” Senate Daily Press Gallery Rules. Further, “[t]he applicant must . . . not be engaged in any lobbying or paid advocacy,” including before Congress or any part of the federal government. Id.

Ateba’s narrow focus on the allegedly “standardless and susceptible to abuse” requirement that an applicant be a “bona fide resident correspondent[] of repute in their profession,” Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 10, removes the important context of the credentialing rules. While the Court does not undertake to offer a binding or limiting definition of the term “of repute” as used in the press credentialing rules, it is apparent that the term at least draws meaning from the rules that follow. See Senate Daily Press Gallery Rules. Unlike in McDaniel v. Lombardi, 227 F. Supp. 3d 1032 (W.D. Mo. 2016), where selection of execution witnesses was based on the naked requirement that the individual be “reputable” in the warden’s point of view, id. at 1034, 1038–39, the standard here is followed by detailed regulations suggesting a more definite meaning differentiating “[who] may come in from [who] must stay out.” Mansky, 138 S. Ct. at 1888. The term “of repute” derives meaning from the central tenets of the regulations—that the person is working as a journalist for an established news organization and that the person does not have any conflicts of interest.⁷

While not directly considering the additional principle of unbridled discretion, the Seventh Circuit has concluded that a very similar set of rules, “adapted from established standards used by . . . the United States Congress” and including the requirement that the journalist be “a bona fide correspondent of repute in their profession,” was a reasonable means for the Wisconsin governor to determine access to press conferences. Evers, 994 F.3d at 606–07, 610–11. The court determined that the criteria were “reasonably related to the viewpoint-neutral goal[s]” of

⁷ The additional rules governing eligibility for press credentials also tend to foreclose Ateba’s argument that “reputable” is a “transparent classification among journalists” in favor of the “institutional press.” Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 16 (citing Citizens United v. Fed. Election Comm’n, 558 U.S. 310, 352 (2010)).

“increasing the journalistic impact of the Governor’s messages by including media that focus primarily on news dissemination, have some longevity in the business, and possess the ability to craft newsworthy stories” and “increasing journalistic integrity by favoring media that avoid real or perceived conflicts of interest or entanglement with special interest groups, or those that engage in advocacy or lobbying.” Id. at 610. This Court agrees.

Importantly, reliance on a professional credentialing body also tends to reduce the risk Ateba apparently fears most—that the White House will discriminate against journalists based on their relationship with the White House. See, e.g., Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 24 (alleging the White House sought to exclude him from the Press Area). Ateba stresses that the credentialing scheme is “uniquely susceptible to abuse” because the press gallery committees are “comprised of a group of journalists who work for news outlets that have a strong institutional foothold in the Washington, D.C. media ecosystem.” Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 12–13. But on Ateba’s own logic, the gallery-review process seems less susceptible to abuse than the apparent alternative of review by the (allegedly biased) White House.

Under the Hard Pass Policy, the White House has constrained its discretion to exclude speakers it disagrees with (except through the Conduct Policy, which is not challenged here). Instead of employing discretion in determining which journalists are eligible to hold a hard pass, the White House Press Office and the Secret Service employ “six clear and definite standards that are not amenable to discretionary judgments,” one of which is whether the applicant holds a Supreme Court or congressional press credential. Defs.’ Mot. at 15. This procedure reduces the risk highlighted in the unbridled discretion cases that a government official—here, the White House—might allocate licenses (hard passes) based on the views of certain speakers (reporters). See Mansky, 138 S. Ct. at 1891 (expressing concern that “[w]ithout [objective, workable standards], an election judge’s own politics may shape his views on what counts as ‘political’”); City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 763–64 (explaining that in the absence of “standards governing the exercise of discretion, a government official may decide who may speak and who may not based upon the content of the speech or the viewpoint of the speaker”).

Ateba’s point that a hard pass seeker may not want to cover Congress or the Supreme Court is well-taken, but it does not defeat the other reasonable features of the credentialing gallery requirement. A regulation can be reasonable without being “the most reasonable or the only reasonable limitation.” Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 808. If the White House had its own press gallery but required journalists to seek a credential from the gallery of another branch of government, the reasonableness of the requirement might be more significantly undermined. But those are not the facts presented here.⁸

Finally, Ateba argues that the congressional press credentialing requirement violates the “unbridled discretion” doctrine because the press galleries are not required to make decisions in any specific period of time. Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 12. His concern, as articulated in some prior unbridled discretion cases, is that the decisionmaker will “indefinitely suppress[] permissible speech” without giving a reason. FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 227 (1990) (Opinion of O’Connor, J.). The Court is wary of applying the extraordinary procedural protections of content-based prior restraints to the application here of content-neutral criteria for press credentialing. As the D.C. Circuit has acknowledged, “[m]ost circuits have held content-neutral licensing schemes need not contain explicit timeframes for processing permit applications.” Boardley v. U.S. Dep’t of Interior, 615 F.3d 508, 518 (D.C. Cir. 2010); see Griffin v. Sec’y of Veterans Affs., 288 F.3d 1309, 1328 (Fed. Cir. 2002) (noting that the procedural safeguards requirement generally “comes into play” where “an explicit censorship scheme—which by definition is not content-neutral—is under attack”). Here, the press gallery regulations are content-neutral, and Ateba does not face a prior restraint on the publication of news articles. Moreover, he still has access to the Press Area with his day pass during the credentialing process, such that his speech there is not entirely curtailed while he awaits a decision. Accordingly, the Court does not find it appropriate to apply the strict procedural safeguards of timely decision-making.

In sum, the Court concludes that the Hard Pass Policy, as it incorporates the requirements of the congressional press galleries, is facially reasonable and viewpoint neutral.

III. Viewpoint Discrimination Challenge to the Hard Pass Policy

Ateba separately claims that the White House violated the First Amendment by engaging in unconstitutional viewpoint discrimination against him. His argument is not that the Hard Pass Policy itself discriminates on the basis of viewpoint—by, for example, providing access only to reporters working for liberal-leaning news organizations. Rather, his allegation is that “the White House intentionally rejiggered its hard-pass criteria and canceled existing passes because of Mr. Ateba’s protected speech.” Pl.’s Reply in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. [ECF No. 29] (“Pl.’s Reply”) at 14. The White House seeks summary judgment on this claim, while Ateba urges the Court to deny summary judgment and afford him the opportunity to obtain discovery. Because the Court concludes that Ateba has failed even to state a plausible claim, Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009), discovery will be denied, and the Court will dismiss the claim.⁹

The government may violate the First Amendment when it regulates speech based on “the specific motivating ideology or the opinion or perspective of the speaker.” Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 576 U.S. 155, 168 (2015) (quoting Rosenberger v. Rector and Visitors of Univ. of Va., 515 U.S. 819, 829 (1995)). The government may not “den[y] access to a speaker solely to suppress the point of view he espouses.” Lamb’s Chapel v. Ctr. Moriches Union Free Sch. Dist., 508 U.S. 384, 393 (1993) (quoting Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 806). Viewpoint discrimination occurs when the government “target[s] ‘a specific premise, a perspective, a standpoint from which a variety of subjects may be discussed and considered.’” People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals v. Tabak, Civ. A. No. 21-2380 (BAH), 2023 WL 2809867, at *13 (D.D.C. Mar. 31, 2023) (quoting Rosenberger, 515 U.S. at 831).

The thrust of the Complaint is that the White House “generally ignore[d]” Ateba’s written and oral questions and refused him access to President Biden. Compl. ¶¶ 42–44. Frustrated, he took to “assert[ing] himself in the briefing room, speaking over other reporters and the White House Press Secretary in an attempt to make his concerns known.” Id. ¶ 5. As examples, he highlights one “notable incident” in which he interrupted the Press Secretary’s introduction of the “Ted Lasso” cast by “questioning why he has not received any responses to his written inquiries or been given the opportunity to ask a question during the press briefing,” id. ¶ 49, and “a number of other occasions” since December 2021 in which he “asserted himself during briefings . . .

seeking answers to his questions,” id. ¶ 52. He claims that the “significant media coverage focusing on [his] conduct in the briefing room prompted the Biden White House to act” by adopting the Hard Pass Policy that resulted in deactivation of his pass. Id. ¶¶ 54, 62.¹⁰

Assuming the truth of Ateba’s allegations, he has alleged discrimination based on his conduct in the briefing room, not any view he holds or shares in his reporting. His claim is that the White House sought to exclude (or limit his access to) the Press Area to prevent his disruptive behavior. But Ateba’s conduct is not itself a viewpoint. See Oberwetter v. Hilliard, 639 F.3d 545, 553 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (regulations that “prohibit disruptive speech regardless of its message” “plainly do not discriminate on the basis of viewpoint”); Eichenlaub v. Township of Indiana, 385 F.3d 274, 281 (3d Cir. 2004) (concluding that “a motive . . . to prevent [] badgering, constant interruptions, and disregard for the rules of decorum” is “sustainable and content-neutral.”); see also Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 811 (“The First Amendment does not forbid a viewpoint-neutral exclusion of speakers who would disrupt a nonpublic forum and hinder its effectiveness for its intended purpose.”).

In his summary judgment reply brief (his fourth substantive brief in this case), Ateba belatedly pivots and suggests that the White House disliked “his focus on U.S. relations with African nations, which Mr. Ateba seeks to cover at the White House.” Pl.’s Reply at 14 (citing Compl. ¶¶ 3–4, 44). “[I]t is a well-settled prudential doctrine that courts generally will not entertain new arguments first raised in a reply brief.” Benton v. Laborers’ Joint Training Fund,

¹⁰ While Ateba’s viewpoint discrimination claim reads more like a First Amendment retaliation claim, he has not briefed it as such. In the D.C. Circuit, “[t]o state a claim for First Amendment retaliation, a plaintiff must allege that: ‘(1) he or she engaged in conduct protected under the First Amendment; (2) the defendant took some retaliatory action sufficient to deter a person of ordinary firmness in plaintiff’s position from speaking again; and (3) a causal link between the exercise of a constitutional right and the adverse action taken against him or her.’” Black Lives Matter D.C. v. Trump, 544 F. Supp. 3d 15, 46 (D.D.C. 2021) (quoting Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242, 258 (D.C. Cir. 2016)). The Court does not pass judgment on whether revocation of a hard pass is sufficiently adverse action as to “deter a person of ordinary firmness in plaintiff’s position from speaking again,” and, thus, whether Ateba’s claim could survive if briefed within the retaliation framework. See Pen Am. Ctr., 448 F. Supp. 3d at 326–27.

121 F. Supp. 3d 41, 51 (D.D.C. 2015) (internal quotation marks omitted). Doing so is not only unfair to the defendant, but also risks “an improvident or ill-advised opinion on the legal issues tendered.” Id. (quoting McBride v. Merrell Dow & Pharm., 800 F.2d 1208, 1211 (D.C. Cir. 1986)). But even if the Court were to consider the argument, the Complaint alleges no facts supporting an inference that the White House adopted the Hard Pass Policy to silence discussion of U.S.-African relations or because of Ateba’s focus on this topic.¹¹ Ateba does not claim, for example, that the White House has generally sought to shut down discussion of that topic, or that others who cover that topic similarly lost their press passes. “That [the White House] put in place a much broader ban . . . suggests it was not discriminating against the views of [Ateba].” AFDI, 901 F.3d at 367.

While the facts alleged in the Complaint support an inference that the White House Press Office disfavored Ateba even before he began disrupting press conferences, those facts do not support the further inference that his viewpoint, or even the content of his speech, has anything to do with this disfavor. He alleges that over five years as a correspondent, he has “rarely received any response” to his questions and has been permitted to attend a press conference with President Biden just once. Compl. ¶¶ 42–43; see id. ¶ 3 (alleging he has had “almost no opportunity to meaningfully communicate with the White House”); id. ¶¶ 46–53 (suggesting that Ateba’s outbursts were treated differently from his colleagues’).

It is true that the Supreme Court has at times suggested that speaker-based discrimination suffices to raise a speech discrimination claim.¹² See Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 340–41 (holding unconstitutional campaign finance regulations based on the corporate identity of the speaker); see also Surita v. Hyde, 665 F.3d 860, 870–71 (7th Cir. 2011) (holding unconstitutional mayor’s exclusion of one particular speaker from participating in a public meeting). However, before and after Citizens United, the Supreme Court has primarily followed the principle that speaker-based discrimination is prohibited when and because it accompanies content discrimination. See Sorrell, 564 U.S. at 565; Asaf Weiner, A Speaker-Based Approach to Speech Moderation and First Amendment Analysis, 31 Stan. L. & Pol’y Rev. 187, 214 (2020). Thus, as the Court summarized in Reed, “[c]haracterizing a distinction as speaker based is only the beginning—not the end—of the inquiry.” 576 U.S. at 170. Although the Court recognized there that “[s]peech restrictions based on the identity of the speaker are all too often simply a means to control content,” it proceeded to suggest that speaker-based concerns arise “when the legislature’s speaker preference reflects a content preference.” Id. (alteration in original) (first quoting Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 340; then quoting Turner Broad. Sys., Inc. v. F.C.C., 512 U.S. 622, 658 (1994)). Ateba’s Complaint does not raise any plausible connection between the viewpoint of his speech (or even its content) and the White House’s alleged animosity toward him. Thus, the Court concludes that the Complaint lacks “sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to ‘state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.’” Ashcroft, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)). The factual allegations, if proved, would not “allow the court to draw the reasonable inference,” Banneker Ventures, LLC v. Graham, 798 F.3d 1119, 1129 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (cleaned up), that the White House adopted the Hard Pass Policy with the “inten[t] sub silentio to suppress [Ateba’s] views.” AFDI, 901 F.3d at 365. The viewpoint discrimination claim thus fails.

¹¹ In the Complaint, Ateba briefly asserts a claim for content-based discrimination, the general category into which viewpoint discrimination falls. Compl. ¶ 91. However, he has failed to elaborate on this theory in any of his briefing on the preliminary injunction or summary judgment. The Court, therefore, considers the argument forfeited. Al-Tamimi v. Adelson, 916 F.3d 1, 6 (D.C. Cir. 2019).

¹² Ateba primarily raised this argument in his preliminary injunction briefing. See Pl.’s Reply in Supp. of Mot. for Prelim. Inj. [ECF No. 18] at 13.

IV. APA Challenge to Cancellation of Ateba’s Hard Pass

Ateba’s final claim is that the Secret Service “violated the [APA] by cancelling [his] hard pass.” Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 19. He asserts that the cancellation was “arbitrary and capricious” because the Secret Service never gave him a reason for canceling the hard passes ex ante, and the ex post explanation (offered in litigation) that too many passes were in circulation, including many that were no longer actively used, “makes no sense applied to Mr. Ateba, who did actively use his hard pass.” Id. The White House and Secret Service have not in litigation offered any rationale (beyond the Hard Pass Policy) for cancelling Ateba’s hard pass, but rather argue that the Secret Service’s cancellation of Ateba’s hard pass is immune from APA review because it was done at the direction of the White House Press Office. Defs.’ Mot. at 21–25.¹³

The President’s actions are not subject to review under the APA. Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800–01 (1992). This preclusion of review also extends to certain executive offices carrying out the President’s directives. See, e.g., Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1073–75 (D.C. Cir. 1971); cf. Wang v. Exec. Off. of the President, Civ. A. No. 07-0891 (JR), 2008 WL 180189, at *1 (D.D.C. Jan. 18, 2008) (holding that the White House Press Office is not “an ‘agency’ within the meaning of FOIA” because it “lacks . . . regulatory authority or government function” independent from the office of the President). Ateba does not challenge the immunity of the White House Press Office from APA review. See Pl.’s Reply at 11. Accordingly, he appears to concede that he cannot challenge the Hard Pass Policy—a policy devised by the White House—under the APA. See id. He focuses instead on the Secret Service’s cancellation of his hard pass. See Pl.’s Reply at 11.

Defendants do not dispute that actions of the Secret Service, a component of the Department of Homeland Security, may be reviewable under the APA. See Defs.’ Mot. at 22; see also Oryszak v. Sullivan, 576 F.3d 522, 524 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (affirming dismissal of claim without questioning the general applicability of the APA to the actions of the Secret Service); Citizens for

Resp. & Ethics in Washington v. U.S. Dep’t of Homeland Sec., 527 F. Supp. 2d 101, 102, 111–112 (D.D.C. 2007) (similar). However, the White House and Secret Service argue that APA immunity extends to agency actions when taken to carry out “discretionary authority vested in the President.” Detroit Int’l Bridge Co. v. Gov’t of Canada, 189 F. Supp. 3d 85, 104 (D.D.C. 2016). Defendants cite a line of district court cases holding unreviewable certain agency actions taken within the authority of the President. See Defs.’ Mot. at 23. In Detroit International Bridge, for example, the court concluded that when the President delegated his discretionary bridge permitting authority to the State Department, the decision remained unreviewable as if it were made by the President. Id. at 100–02.

Ateba claims that these cases are factually distinguishable, as they involve special intrusions into presidential power inapplicable here. See Pl.’s Reply at 11–12. He asserts the defendants’ position would “prove[] too much” since “[t]he whole of the executive power rests with the President,” id. at 11, and he directs the Court instead to various cases in which courts have reviewed agency decisions that implement a presidential directive, see Pl.’s Cross-Mot. & Opp’n at 19–20, 20 n.8; see also Hawaii v. Trump, 878 F.3d 662, 680–81 (9th Cir. 2017) (per curiam) (reviewing APA suit against “the President . . . [and] the entities charged with carrying out his instructions” to exclude certain foreign nationals from entering the United States), rev’d and remanded on other grounds, 138 S. Ct. 2392 (2018); O.A. v. Trump, 404 F. Supp. 3d 109, 147 (D.D.C. 2019) (undertaking APA review of an agency rule implemented pursuant to a presidential proclamation pertaining to asylum seekers).

The White House and Secret Service reply in turn that Ateba’s cited cases are “inapposite” because they hold only that “when the President directs agencies to exercise their authority, the agencies’ exercise of their own authority in the form of a regulation or other final agency action is not insulated from review merely because the President started that process.” Defs.’ Reply & Opp’n at 11; see also Detroit Int’l Bridge Co., 189 F. Supp. 3d at 104 (“[W]hen the challenge is to an action delegated [by Congress] to an agency head but directed by the President, . . . the President effectively has stepped into the shoes of an agency head, and the review provisions usually applicable to that agency’s action should govern.” (quoting Elena Kagan, Presidential Administration, 114 Harv. L. Rev. 2245, 2351 (2001))).

The line between agency action attributable to the President versus that of an agency is concededly blurry. Courts have not always articulated the clear rule offered by the White House, and they have reviewed the legality of presidential orders incorporated into agency actions. See, e.g., Hawaii, 878 F.3d at 680–81. But wherever courts should draw the line, purely administrative and ministerial actions by a federal agency effectuating the final step of a discretionary presidential decision fall within the scope of presidential immunity from the APA. To hold otherwise would seriously undermine the protection afforded to the President from APA review and, in certain cases, raise concerns about separation of powers. See Detroit Int’l Bridge Co., 189 F. Supp. 3d at 103. Further, finding such actions reviewable “would suggest the absurd notion that all presidential actions must be carried out by the President him or herself in order to receive the deference Congress has chosen to give to presidential action.” Tulare Cnty. v. Bush, 185 F. Supp. 2d 18, 28–29 (D.D.C. 2001).

Here, defendants assert, and Ateba does not contest, “the invitation of members of the press into the White House by the Press Office” and the “authority to set the non-security standards for White House press passes” is “discretionary authority committed to the President” carried out by the Press Office. Defs.’ Mot. at 23; Defs.’ Reply & Opp’n at 11; see Pl.’s Reply at 11–12. The undisputed facts further demonstrate that while the Secret Service has discretionary authority to determine when a reporter is a security risk, it has no discretionary authority or role in determining whether a journalist meets the other press-based criteria. Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ Facts ¶ 1 (“White House press access is determined by the White House Press Office, subject to a U.S. Secret Service security review.” (citations omitted)).

The Secret Service has no role in generating the list of press members that the White House Press Office authorizes for a hard pass. The Secret Service’s role in the process of authorizing entry into the White House complex is limited to conducting the necessary security checks and the issuance/renewal of the physical hard pass to the individual press member.

3d Fleischer Decl. ¶ 13. Thus, when the Hard Pass Policy went into effect on August 1, 2023, “the White House Press Office instructed the Secret Service to deactivate the hard passes that did not meet the White House Press Office’s requirements for renewal, including Mr. Ateba’s.” Id. ¶ 5. The Secret Service simply rubber-stamped the White House’s decision.

That the Secret Service has an independent statutory and regulatory role in determining White House access, Pl.’s Reply at 11, does not make the deactivation of Ateba’s hard pass reviewable. Unlike in Sherrill, the Secret Service did not deactivate Ateba’s pass for security reasons. If the President sought a change in security protocols, and the Secret Service enacted a new rule to enforce them, such action might be reviewable. But that is not what we have. Here, the deactivation reflected the White House’s change in policy as to which journalists were entitled to expedited access. The Secret Service’s mere involvement at the final step does not warrant review.

The futility of APA review in these circumstances further supports the Court’s conclusion that the Secret Service’s decision is unreviewable. Ateba’s Complaint is that the Secret Service “failed to provide any reason to justify terminating Mr. Ateba’s hard pass, let alone a ‘good reason’ or a ‘reasoned explanation.’” Compl. ¶ 101. Yet, his own Complaint acknowledges that “the Secret Service appears to be relying on a policy issue[d] by the White House Press Office.” Id.

The Secret Service declaration confirms his suspicion. If the Court held in favor of Ateba, the appropriate remedy would be a remand to the Secret Service to provide a reasoned explanation. But remand here would either be entirely un revelatory—“the White House told us to”—or it would provide a backdoor to review the White House’s decision-making. Cf. Judicial Watch, Inc. v. U.S. Secret Serv., 726 F.3d 208, 225 (D.C. 2013) (refusing to permit plaintiff to access White House visitor log records from the Secret Service, when such records would disclose otherwise exempt information about the appointment calendars of members of the White House Office). Accordingly, the Secret Service is entitled to summary judgment on Ateba’s APA claim.

V. Conclusion

For the reasons explained above, the Court will grant summary judgment to the White House and the Secret Service on Counts One and Three and dismiss Count Two without prejudice. A separate Order to this effect accompanies this Memorandum Opinion.
